RADARSCREEN THE GLOBAL PITCH GUIDE

GREATEST TANK BATTLES

ALL NEW SEASON 3
FROM BREAKTHROUGH ENTERTAINMENT

A PUBLICATION OF BRUNICO COMMUNICATIONS LTD.
THE REALITY?
TIME IS MONEY.

With one phone call Crews Control matches you with 2,000 locally based and pre-screened crews around the world.

Multiple locations? Impossible deadlines? Tight budgets? No problem. Call 1-800-545-CREW or go to CrewsControl.com for a free quote.

crewscontrol where creativity meets its match.
CONTENTS

EDITOR’S NOTE ........................................ 4
UNITED STATES ............................................ 7
CANADA .................................................. 28
UNITED KINGDOM ...................................... 36
EUROPE .................................................... 44
ISRAEL ..................................................... 54
AUSTRALIA ............................................... 55
ASIA .......................................................... 56
FUNDERS .................................................... 61
Welcome to our third annual Global Pitch Guide, designed to illuminate the needs of commissioning editors and programming execs from around the world, and to offer helpful tips on the best ways to approach said individuals when pitching your non-fiction projects (public washrooms, incidentally, are a no-no).

As we’ve done for the past two editions, the realscreen editorial staff has once again reached out to scads of commissioners and distilled their collected wisdom in the following pages, and you’ll also find more profiles at www.realscreen.com. We’ve added a couple of tweaks to our coverage this year – important details such as contact info, target demo and whether or not the network takes unsolicited pitches have been broken out as bullet points in each profile for your convenience, and we’ve also asked our subjects to weigh in on how to make your sizzle reels, or taster tapes, tastier.

While the shopping lists vary from region to region and from network to network, there are certainly threads that run throughout the commentary within. You’ll see several execs touting the value of “authenticity,” which is reassuring, considering that we’re discussing non-fiction programming. You’ll also find the phrase “larger than life characters” popping up repeatedly in these profiles, particularly from North American networks.

Of course, you’ll also see much mention of the importance of great storytelling, both in the project itself and in the pitch. Clarity, focus, authority and passion go a long way towards getting a project on screen, and in telling the story itself.

Thus, with all of that in mind, please read on to find out in more detail who wants what, and how they want it. It’s said that knowledge is power, so it’s our hope that the nuggets contained herein will inspire some powerful pitches in the months ahead.

Cheers,
Barry Walsh
Editor
realscreen
Great Brands Live Here

Introducing Warner/Chappell Production Music. Building the world’s finest collection of production music companies.
stay fresh.
Send submissions to manager of development Laurie Sharpe: laurie.sharpe@aenetworks.com. She’ll require a signed release.

Sweet spot is 25-39, with a 50-50 split between male and female.

“We are truly competitive when it comes to series commission costs, and each show is different.”

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
“The people that come to our shows appreciate real life series that are entertaining at their core, but that are relatable too,” says Frontain Bryant, who points towards family relationships, workplace relationships and friendships as subject matter that clicks for the net. However, these stories are told via “larger than life characters… characters people want to hang out with,” as seen in recent hit Duck Dynasty.

Series tend to be half-hours but A&E will look at hour-long series as well. “It’s truly about finding the best fit for the show,” she says.

PITCHING “DON'T’S”:
“Authenticity” is the key element to A&E non-fiction programming, says Frontain Bryant, so with that in mind, producers should make sure they have their, ahem, ducks in a row when it comes to pitching talent to the net.

“We really don’t like it when folks pitch us a world they don’t have access to,” she says. “And it’s always preferable if you are pitching characters to have them on tape. To that end, I find pitch meetings are better without the talent in the room – the producers and execs can have a more realistic talk about the show that isn’t hampered by worrying about hurting talent’s feelings.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
“When a sizzle reel establishes characters, their relationships to each other, the unique world they inhabit, and frankly even how [the] story could be approached, it’s a home run.”

“We really don’t like it when folks pitch us a world they don’t have access to.”
In 2011 more delegates attended the Festival than ever before, resulting in a record increase in sales. This year, make it happen in Toronto.

REGISTER NOW

tiff.net/industry/register
ANIMAL PLANET

ANDY WEISSBERG

VICE PRESIDENT, PROGRAMMING AND SCHEDULING

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
What works best for the Discovery Communications net are character-based shows with larger-than-life characters who are interesting and unusual, such as River Monsters’ Jeremy Wade, Call of the Wildman’s Ernie Brown Jr., and Whale Wars’ Sea Shepherds. Characters also need to be relatable and evoke credibility in their worlds, since they serve as the audience’s entry point.

As for the tone of the programming, Weissberg says: “Animal Planet tries to respect animals and the world we share with them, as we explore the connection between human and animals.”

HOW TO PITCH:
There’s no absolute preferred method of pitching to Animal Planet, since in-person meetings, phone calls and emailed pitches are all acceptable. They are open to seeing pitches early in the process, via one-pagers or Skype interviews, or a short outline and a YouTube clip. For talent-based pitches, tape is necessary.

After submitting ideas to the Discovery Producer’s Portal, follow up by sending materials to the network’s development assistant, Karl Rodulfo, via email at Karl_Rodulfo@Discovery.com.

PITCHING DON’TS:
Don’t pitch talent that you haven’t contacted or already signed to a holding deal. Don’t self-censor when pitching Animal Planet. Weissberg advises, and send pitches that explore “animal” and/or “planet” elements. Also, try to consider “man versus nature” and “man versus the elements” themes.

WHAT IT PAYS:
Animal Planet’s per-hour costs generally range from US$250,000 to $400,000 but can go as high as $800,000 for big ideas. Orders are typically six to 10 hours for a first season series, and with very successful series, the order may increase to 20 hours.

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
Weissberg says Animal Planet wants to see the talent interacting. It’s also more advantageous if the sizzle reel can hint about the stories viewers would see in the series.

“Our executives thoroughly read treatments, and while a strong scene can pique our interest, it’s better if we see tape that can speak to narrative arcs,” he says.

As for music, Weissberg recommends producers reconsider using The Black Keys in sizzles. “We love that duo, but we have heard ‘Gold on the Ceiling’ and ‘Tighten Up’ countless times!”

“We try to respect animals and the world we share with them."
“We tend to have a bit of a male skew with a median age in the low 40s.”

“Our viewers have passports and know how to use them.”

“British twist” could turn up a winner for the network.

Indeed, Smith says that the net’s Brit-ness is its unique angle. “We offer our viewers access to a world where they can explore the intricacies of British culture, and also see how much the American cultural conversation has British influence at every turn,” she says. To that end, Smith says combining a forward-thinking, trendsetting idea with a “British twist” could turn up a winner for the network.

As for volumes, BBC America is looking for longer-running, returnable series. “Talent should be able to come back season after season so that we can build a new stable of familiar faces for our brand,” Smith says. While the network commissions mostly hours, it’s open to half-hours.

HOW TO PITCH:
Agents and producers can send pitches to Smith via the email address above, or to SVP of programming Richard De Croce (richard.decroce@bbc.com) or senior manager of unscripted programming Michelle Pilson (michelle.pilson@bbc.com). One-pagers and links to tape are the preferred submission materials for Smith and team. “but if you have an idea you want to run by us quickly, we’re always happy to get back to you on a logline,” Smith also advises that you watch the net to get a feel for its “cheeky and irreverent” personality.

Also, as the network takes a “talent first” approach, “even if you don’t have a star attached to the pitch just yet, please come with some talent ideas.” BW
Yes, but proper paperwork and release forms need to be signed. Contact the submissions department directly to get and sign the release via 818.777.6879; submissions@nbcuni.com.

Usually, Bravo orders six or eight one-hour episodes for a first season show, “with the orders typically going up in subsequent seasons.”

TAKES UNSOLICITED PITCHES?

Yes, but proper paperwork and release forms need to be signed. Contact the submissions department directly to get and sign the release via 818.777.6879; submissions@nbcuni.com.

SERIES VOLUMES:

Usually, Bravo orders six or eight one-hour episodes for a first season show, “with the orders typically going up in subsequent seasons.”

“"Our viewers respond to new and different ideas and we do too."”

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:

“In terms of what we look for in a specific pitch, first and foremost it’s compelling tape,” offers Lehrer. “So much of what we do on Bravo is character-driven that it’s unusual for us to get excited about a project if we can’t see the character, or characters, driving the show.” Bringing the talent in can be a bit of a “crapshoot,” he advises, and for formatted series, “one-pagers and treatments are important as well and can, at times, better convey the concept than a rushed piece of tape.”

Over the past year the NBCU cable net has aired some half-hour series, and Lehrer says orders for those tend to be a bit larger, but “our major focus is still one-hours.” As for tone and subject matter, Lehrer says, “We like our shows to be built around people who are both at the top of their game – whether it’s in real estate, matchmaking, styling or cooking – and truly willing to give our viewers an intimate look at what makes them, and their businesses, tick.” But he also advises that producers trying to unlock the key to what the network wants should flip the question, and consider instead what it doesn’t want.

“For instance, we aren’t looking for projects that are primarily male-appealing (though we do respond to shows that appeal to men or promote co-viewing), spaces we’ve explored in the past, or those that are too derivative of shows we currently have on our air,” he offers. “Our viewers respond to new and different ideas and we do too.”

Think of the network’s audience as divided into two core groups: “Will and Gracers” (affluent, cosmopolitan, educated, and mostly single) and “PTA Trendsetters” (also affluent and engaged with pop culture but more suburban, perhaps mothers).

HOW TO MAKE A KILLER SIZZLE:

“The best sizzles accomplish three things,” says Lehrer. “First, they give our development team an accurate sense of the characters – their day-to-day, their homes, etc. – and the world they inhabit. Second, killer sizzles tell us, at least in some way, how the show would look and progress in series. They have to leave us wanting more. Finally, the perfect sizzles show that you are a viable partner to execute the idea on the tape.”

BW
DESTINATION AMERICA

MARC ETKIND
SVP OF CONTENT STRATEGY

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
The recently launched Destination America is looking for all things American in genres including food, travel, home, adventure, and natural history. “We want to celebrate the people, places, and stories of the United States, emblazoned with the grit and tenacity, honesty and work ethic, humor, adventurousness, and the component of nostalgia that characterize our nation,” says Etkind.

HOW TO PITCH:
Pitches have the best chance with the Discovery Communications net if they are clear and concise in terms of an overall treatment and a sample act-by-act breakdown, which will give Etkind and team an idea of how you see your concept translating into a television show. However, remember that geography is important. “You may have a hard time convincing us that your show set in Europe is right for Destination America.”

“Our budgets are on the lower end of the spectrum, but we are committed to quality programming and will work with you to land on a budget that works for all parties,” Etkind adds. “We’re open to coproductions, and can often allow companies to retain international rights.”

CMT

JAYSON DINSMORE
EVP OF DEVELOPMENT

WHAT THEY'RE LOOKING FOR:
The country music and related-lifestyle network’s top reality shows include fish-out-of-water series My Big Redneck Vacation, the rags-to-riches Bayou Billionaires, music franchise CMT Crossroads and the perennially popular CMT Music Awards.

The majority of its pitches come from agents or producers that have existing relationships with the network, so smaller producers are encouraged to partner with larger ones. If a show is character-based, a reel will work but paper pitches will be accepted in the case of heavily formatted shows.

“Our audience is not interested in heavy-handed producing or overly dramatic storylines,” says Dinsmore. “Most of CMT’s programming derives from a very specific world view—a passion for having a hell of a good time. We look for strong characters. People who are inherently funny, a bit loud and a bit crazy, but who also have real heart and humor in the way they interact with each other. Our audience wants to laugh, or cry from laughing so hard.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
“The best reels have a specific point of view, are cleverly edited, not too long, and feature characters that demand our attention,” he says. “If done well, a reel will elicit an emotional response; be it humor, nostalgia or excitement for a project.”

CONTACT INFO:
Jayson.dinsmore@cmt.com.

TREATMENT OR TAPE?:
Both.

TARGET DEMO/AUDIENCE:
50-50 male/female with an average age hovering in the late 30s and early 40s.

CONTACT:

WHAT THEY'RE LOOKING FOR:
The recently launched Destination America is looking for all things American in genres including food, travel, home, adventure, and natural history. “We want to celebrate the people, places, and stories of the United States, emblazoned with the grit and tenacity, honesty and work ethic, humor, adventurousness, and the component of nostalgia that characterize our nation,” says Etkind.

HOW TO PITCH:
Pitches have the best chance with the Discovery Communications net if they are clear and concise in terms of an overall treatment and a sample act-by-act breakdown, which will give Etkind and team an idea of how you see your concept translating into a television show. However, remember that geography is important. “You may have a hard time convincing us that your show set in Europe is right for Destination America.”

“Our budgets are on the lower end of the spectrum, but we are committed to quality programming and will work with you to land on a budget that works for all parties,” Etkind adds. “We’re open to coproductions, and can often allow companies to retain international rights.”

CONTACT:

WHAT THEY'RE LOOKING FOR:
The country music and related-lifestyle network’s top reality shows include fish-out-of-water series My Big Redneck Vacation, the rags-to-riches Bayou Billionaires, music franchise CMT Crossroads and the perennially popular CMT Music Awards.

The majority of its pitches come from agents or producers that have existing relationships with the network, so smaller producers are encouraged to partner with larger ones. If a show is character-based, a reel will work but paper pitches will be accepted in the case of heavily formatted shows.

“Our audience is not interested in heavy-handed producing or overly dramatic storylines,” says Dinsmore. “Most of CMT’s programming derives from a very specific world view—a passion for having a hell of a good time. We look for strong characters. People who are inherently funny, a bit loud and a bit crazy, but who also have real heart and humor in the way they interact with each other. Our audience wants to laugh, or cry from laughing so hard.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
“The best reels have a specific point of view, are cleverly edited, not too long, and feature characters that demand our attention,” he says. “If done well, a reel will elicit an emotional response; be it humor, nostalgia or excitement for a project.”

CONTACT INFO:
Jayson.dinsmore@cmt.com.

TREATMENT OR TAPE?:
Both.

TARGET DEMO/AUDIENCE:
50-50 male/female with an average age hovering in the late 30s and early 40s.

CONTACT:

WHAT THEY'RE LOOKING FOR:
The recently launched Destination America is looking for all things American in genres including food, travel, home, adventure, and natural history. “We want to celebrate the people, places, and stories of the United States, emblazoned with the grit and tenacity, honesty and work ethic, humor, adventurousness, and the component of nostalgia that characterize our nation,” says Etkind.

HOW TO PITCH:
Pitches have the best chance with the Discovery Communications net if they are clear and concise in terms of an overall treatment and a sample act-by-act breakdown, which will give Etkind and team an idea of how you see your concept translating into a television show. However, remember that geography is important. “You may have a hard time convincing us that your show set in Europe is right for Destination America.”

“Our budgets are on the lower end of the spectrum, but we are committed to quality programming and will work with you to land on a budget that works for all parties,” Etkind adds. “We’re open to coproductions, and can often allow companies to retain international rights.”

CONTACT:

WHAT THEY'RE LOOKING FOR:
The country music and related-lifestyle network’s top reality shows include fish-out-of-water series My Big Redneck Vacation, the rags-to-riches Bayou Billionaires, music franchise CMT Crossroads and the perennially popular CMT Music Awards.

The majority of its pitches come from agents or producers that have existing relationships with the network, so smaller producers are encouraged to partner with larger ones. If a show is character-based, a reel will work but paper pitches will be accepted in the case of heavily formatted shows.

“Our audience is not interested in heavy-handed producing or overly dramatic storylines,” says Dinsmore. “Most of CMT’s programming derives from a very specific world view—a passion for having a hell of a good time. We look for strong characters. People who are inherently funny, a bit loud and a bit crazy, but who also have real heart and humor in the way they interact with each other. Our audience wants to laugh, or cry from laughing so hard.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
“The best reels have a specific point of view, are cleverly edited, not too long, and feature characters that demand our attention,” he says. “If done well, a reel will elicit an emotional response; be it humor, nostalgia or excitement for a project.”

CONTACT INFO:
Jayson.dinsmore@cmt.com.

TREATMENT OR TAPE?:
Both.

TARGET DEMO/AUDIENCE:
50-50 male/female with an average age hovering in the late 30s and early 40s.

CONTACT:

WHAT THEY'RE LOOKING FOR:
The recently launched Destination America is looking for all things American in genres including food, travel, home, adventure, and natural history. “We want to celebrate the people, places, and stories of the United States, emblazoned with the grit and tenacity, honesty and work ethic, humor, adventurousness, and the component of nostalgia that characterize our nation,” says Etkind.

HOW TO PITCH:
Pitches have the best chance with the Discovery Communications net if they are clear and concise in terms of an overall treatment and a sample act-by-act breakdown, which will give Etkind and team an idea of how you see your concept translating into a television show. However, remember that geography is important. “You may have a hard time convincing us that your show set in Europe is right for Destination America.”

“Our budgets are on the lower end of the spectrum, but we are committed to quality programming and will work with you to land on a budget that works for all parties,” Etkind adds. “We’re open to coproductions, and can often allow companies to retain international rights.”

CONTACT:
UNITED STATES

DISCOVERY CHANNEL

SIMON ANDREAE
SVP, DEVELOPMENT & PRODUCTION,
WEST COAST

DOLORES GAVIN
SVP, DEVELOPMENT & PRODUCTION,
EAST COAST

WHAT THEY’RE LOOKING FOR:
With Discovery’s audience clocking in at about 65% male, and with an average age of 41, Gavin and Andreae say the tone of the network ranges from “guys doing tough jobs to deep science mysteries.” Character-driven series are tops on the shopping list, with the development execs pointing to “great characters with personal stakes in the outcome, great back-story and enough action to drive the storyline” as fundamental elements needed for Discovery programming. Recent breakout hits from the net have included Gold Rush, Moonshiners, Bering Sea Gold and Sons of Guns. The team is also interested in exploring “organic formats.”

HOW TO PITCH:
Pitches don’t have to come through an agent or a lawyer, but they do have to be registered on Discovery’s producer’s portal, at producers.discovery.com. And while tape is not essential, “it really helps.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
Gavin and Andreae offer plenty of tips on the sizzle front. “Great sizzles tell us what the show is,” they say. “They have two or three main story beats and primarily showcase the talent and set up the world that they inhabit. You should be able to tell your story without narration, with either slates or sound bites, and they should be no longer than five minutes.”

CONTACT:
For East Coast, Matt Kelly (Matthew_kelly@discovery.com) and Mike Sorensen (Michael_Sorensen@discovery.com)

TREATMENT OR TAPE?:
“Tape is preferred, a treatment is a must.”
FOOD NETWORK/
COOKING CHANNEL

BRIAN LANDO
SVP, DEVELOPMENT, FOOD NETWORK
AND COOKING CHANNEL

JENNIFER QUAINTON
VP, PROGRAMMING, FOOD NETWORK
AND COOKING CHANNEL

WHAT THEY’RE LOOKING FOR:
The Food Network’s audience is relatively upscale, 60/40 female in prime time and 70/30 female on the weekend mornings. Cooking Channel’s demo is the same but skews slightly more male during prime time by virtue of being a digital channel.

Competition shows and formatted reality such as Chopped, Iron Chef America, Restaurant Stakeout and Mystery Diners are working well for Food, which tends to have deeper pockets than its sister channel. Execs are looking to try out more docusoaps and travel series and, more broadly, are interested in primetime programming that attracts a dual audience and personality-led shows for the weekend. “Shows about people who cook versus ‘cooking shows,’ ” says Lando.

Cooking Channel, meanwhile, is looking for talent-led programming with specific points of view. “Our viewers are looking for an experience, so getting talent out of the kitchen is important,” says Quainton. “We haven’t yet cracked the code on a drink program that is successful with our food audience.”

HOW TO PITCH:
A character tape or sizzle is a must except in the case of a format. With sizzles, they’re looking for high production values, conciseness and energy.

“Entertainment and a respect for food needs to be at the core of our programming,” says Lando. “Content with an element of redemption and resolution is what best serves our primetime programming. Viewers also come to us looking for aspirational content. Segments from morning shows or talent tapes that feature cursing and yelling for drama’s sake are not going to likely land a project.”

CONTACT INFO:
Peipei Zhang, development coordinator: pzhang@foodnetwork.com.

TREATMENT OR TAPE?:
Both.

TAKES UNSOLICITED PITCHES?:
No.
“Producers can send us one-liners to gauge interest, but if we’re really going to move on something, we have to see some tape.”

All programmers at History develop and oversee series and specials. Thus, Hoogstra says, “We encourage producers to have multiple points of contact.”

“Tape or Treatment?:

“Producers can send us one-liners to gauge interest, but if we’re really going to move on something, we have to see some tape.”

“Contact:

All programmers at History develop and oversee series and specials. Thus, Hoogstra says, “We encourage producers to have multiple points of contact.”

“WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:

“For our guys, authenticity is key,” says Hoogstra. “They want to know that the characters they’re watching are the real deal. It’s what unites our hit series, Pawn Stars, American Pickers, Swamp People, Ax Men, Top Gear... our viewers are not only entertained by these characters, they’re getting insight and information from them.”

Beyond authenticity, however, Hoogstra likes to keep an open mind when it comes to evaluating pitches. “Since I started working with Nancy Dubuc in 2007, she’s been clear that it doesn’t make sense to have a filter,” he says. “Our team lives and breathes this brand, [so] we know it when we see it.”

“WHAT NOT TO DO IN THE PITCH:

Don’t be rigid, but rather, try to embrace a flexible approach to the process, offers Hoogstra. “We try to have a fluid and creative development process,” he says. “We know what our viewers are looking for and we appreciate when producers work with us as creative partners. It’s tough when a producer comes in just looking for a yes or no on something.”

“WHAT HE PAYS:

For History, the creative defines the budget. “I don’t believe in market price for shows,” maintains Hoogstra. “I want to know what it’s going to cost to create the show we believe will work the best for History.”

“REGARDING SIZZLE REELS:

“A great sizzle showcases the characters and gives us a clear reason why viewers would make an appointment to watch this show.”

“Our team lives and breathes this brand; we know it when we see it.”
“Great characters, unexpected stories, wonderful storytelling.”
MTV
CHRIS LINN
HEAD OF PRODUCTION AND EVP, PROGRAMMING

WHAT IT’S LOOKING FOR:
MTV looks for programming across all genres – reality, scripted, music and animation – with emotional stakes and characters in “relatable, yet amplified situations.” The motto is “new, not ‘next’” so anything that feels derivative of what’s already on the air – namely “the next version of Jersey Shore” – is going to get a pass.

Linn and his team are open to discuss pitches in the early stages of development in order to guide the process and best meet the network’s dynamic programming needs.

“Tonedly, our audience is looking to be surprised, informed and entertained,” says Linn. “While they like us to address substantive issues that impact their lives, the overall experience should feel like a fun ride.”

HOW TO PITCH:
A good pitch will clearly define the concept, reflect a producer’s professional standards and show an understanding of the millennial audience and how they conduct their lives. Sizzle reels should be no longer than three-to-five minutes, especially if the pitch is in person. Links to longer formats can be emailed after the initial pitch when appropriate.

“Authenticity is key,” he maintains. “It is important to challenge formula and avoid conceits that feel phony or fake.”

TAKES UNSOLICITED PITCHES?:
No.

TREATMENT OR TAPE?:
A two-page outline is standard. Tape is not necessary but helpful if illustrating a format show with a specific type of cast or character.

TARGET DEMO/AUDIENCE:
MTV aims for a broad 12-34 audience with a core target of females 18-24. Male-skewing shows are welcome as long as they don’t exclude the female demo.

“Our audience is looking to be surprised, informed and entertained.”
“We are making bigger, bolder bets on new programming.”

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC CHANNEL

ALAN EYRES
SVP, PROGRAMMING AND DEVELOPMENT

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
LA-based Eyres says that NGC is expanding its reach when it comes to its approach to factual content. “We are growing quickly in two areas – gritty character-driven programming such as Wicked Tuna, and ‘American Outlier’ programming that presents unique worlds, cultures and people that are surprisingly relatable, such as our number one series Doomsday Preppers, American Colony: Meet the Hutterites and Amish: Out of Order,” he offers. It’s all part of a move towards what he calls “more contemporary storytelling methods and focusing on captivating and recurring characters in a dramatic style.

“Non-fiction for us covers a wide spectrum,” he says. “We are making bigger, bolder bets on new programming and balancing authenticity with entertainment for a primarily male audience.”

HOW TO PITCH:
Producers should check the global “Ideas” website (URL to the left) dedicated to pitches. Also, Eyres says interested parties should take note that NGC now has development reps in New York, LA, Washington DC and London, “so we are situated as a global team ready to hear any pitch.”

He adds that loglines are “a great place to start and gauge interest,” and that tape should accompany any pitch reliant on characters.

“We don’t want price point to be a deterrent on pitches – we will look at anything, and our programming slate is varied from US$150,000-$400,000 an hour,” he adds. As for what not to do, Eyres advises that producers keep an open mind when approaching NGC. “Don’t predetermine what won’t work for us,” he says. “We want to look at a breadth and depth of fresh programming ideas from the most creative producers out there.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
“The tape doesn’t need to be expensive, but it needs to offer us fresh original worlds and give a clear insight into the characters.”
Tape is a must for any talent or host-related pitch. A one-pager “with enough details to set your project apart” suffices otherwise.

TARGET DEMO:
Male, 25-55 years old. “It’s really important that we deliver shows that appeal to this demo.”

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
“Our shows are first and foremost entertaining,” says Han Vissering about National Geographic Channel’s sister net. “We also try and keep a positive and uplifting message.” Successful series have included the anthology series World’s Deadliest and World’s Weirdest; Caught in the Act; The Incredible Dr. Pol; Fish Tank Kings; and The Dog Whisperer. Han Vissering says blue chip history specials also “continue to rate and define our network.”

The pricing range for commissions starts in the US$200,000 per hour range “and goes up from there,” she says, with series orders tackling a minimum of six episodes. The net airs hours and half-hours.

PITCHING DON’TS:
Although the network is known as the more wildlife-oriented of the Nat Geo Channel family, Han Vissering says that while producers should definitely be familiar with what it airs, they shouldn’t come to the pitching table with preconceived notions. She maintains that it’s a “big no-no when producers ‘pre-edit’ or assume what won’t work for us because we carry the National Geographic brand.”

“Let us make that editorial decision on what we can or can’t air,” she advises. “Bring us everything.”

SIZZLE TIPS:
“Make it concise, exciting, and definitely must see television,” she counsels. “If you can’t master this in the sizzle, the show won’t happen.”

“We try and keep a positive and uplifting message.”
Tape for docuseries.

TARGET DEMO:
25-35 years old, female.

BUDGETS:
Can start in the US$300,000 range, with a higher end of upwards of $500,000.

---

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
The NBCUniversal cable network with the tagline of ‘Live out loud’ wants formatted series, docuseroaps with large story arcs, and characters that are big, bold and unapologetic. The net aims to capture a female audience experiencing different stages within the 25-35 age span – transitional major life moments such as marriage, starting a family and beginning a career.

A recent example of what’s worked for Oxygen is The Glee Project, a reality competition show created by Glee’s Ryan Murphy. “We were able to take a very popular show in Glee and figure out what the reality version of that is, which was unique and it felt like you hadn’t seen it before,” says Abraham.

She tends to order six to eight hours for a freshman series.

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
Sizzles can be as brief as a minute and a half to three minutes to get your point across.

“It’s great to see someone on camera being themselves in their own environment and it’s probably a better way to assess whether they’re going to be a good character for television than [having] them in an executive’s office, feeling slightly nervous around a conference room table,” she says. Tape doesn’t have to be great quality, as they’ve bought shows based on Skype footage.

---

TREATMENT OR TAPE?: Tape.

TARGET DEMO/AUDIENCE:
The PBS footprint covers 115 million TV households and POV reaches roughly 97% of those viewers.

WHAT THEY'RE LOOKING FOR:
Now in its 25th year, the PBS independent documentary strand programs around 14 to 16 documentaries a year that use a variety of styles – from personal essays and cinéma vérité to experimental and animation – to engage viewers around an issue through a strongly authored and character-driven approach.

Its basic license fee is US$30,000 per hour or $45,000 per feature acquisition. Copro funding ranges from $30,000-$70,000 with a high mark of $150,000. Run times are 51:25 and 81:25 minutes and varying lengths in between. It also accepts short films.

Hopeful filmmakers are advised to log on to www.pbs.org/pov and peruse the strand’s back catalog of more than 365 films to get a feel for programmers’ tastes. “Always have some scenes for us to take a look at,” says EP Simon Kilmurry. “Browse our submission guidelines and know that we cannot get involved at the development stage.”

CONTACT INFO:
Submit to the “POV” Call for Entries (deadline is annually at the end of June) via www.pbs.org/pov/filmmakers. Out-of-cycle submissions should be sent to Andrew Catauro, coordinating producer at: 20 Jay Street, Suite 940 Brooklyn, NY 11201 or via acatauro@pov.org. Always include a DVD or link to scenes and a very brief description.
SCIENCE

DEBBIE MYERS
GENERAL MANAGER

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
“Our audience wants smart, lean-forward entertainment,” says Myers of the Discovery net’s programming mandate. “We are looking for something different and unique. Science loves programming where we are leading the genre or style of storytelling that is completely different from our competitors.” She’s most interested in “something that investigates further the heart of the unknown or the mysteries of what is around us. We also appreciate having a sense of humor!” She’s looking for programs that are “personal to the viewer and, most of all, passionate in their storytelling.”

TARGET DEMO:
25-54, more male than female.

PITCHING “DON’TS”:
Stay away from “copycat formats from other networks” and “old-fashioned science shows.”

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
“Our audience wants smart, lean-forward entertainment,” says Myers of the Discovery net’s programming mandate. “We are looking for something different and unique. Science loves programming where we are leading the genre or style of storytelling that is completely different from our competitors.” She’s most interested in “something that investigates further the heart of the unknown or the mysteries of what is around us. We also appreciate having a sense of humor!” She’s looking for programs that are “personal to the viewer and, most of all, passionate in their storytelling.”

How to Pitch:
Contact her development team – Brad Kohlenstein, Brian Lavin and Julia Wagman – with an email detailing your credentials if you’ve not worked with them before, a logline, and casting ideas.

SIZZLE TIPS:
Tell the story in about three minutes or less,” says Myers. “Also, don’t bury the lead. What is the logline of your project? We want to understand in a sentence or two what that key concept is about.” As for casting, Skype can work as well as a talent reel.

SPIKE

CHRIS RANTAMAKI
VICE PRESIDENT OF ORIGINAL PROGRAMMING

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
“Concepts that work best for us have big characters, clear stakes, lots of conflict and a strong hook that keeps the audience glued all the way to the end,” says Rantamaki. Shows currently working well for the Viacom net include the tattoo competition series, Ink Master, which is coming back for another season, Auction Hunters, and Bar Rescue.

HOW TO PITCH:
Spike prefers producers to go through agents or attorneys to pitch them. Rantamaki and team also attend the Realscreen Summit and Realscreen West, and WestDoc.

PITCHING “DON’TS”:
Don’t bring leftovers. “Bring your ideas to us first because we move quickly,” he cautions. “We have a focused, agile team and it’s not uncommon to go from pitch to air in a matter of months.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
Sizzles should clearly communicate the format of the show and allow the Spike execs to see the chemistry and range of the characters.
UNITED STATES

STYLE NETWORK
SARAH WEIDMAN
SVP, ORIGINAL PROGRAMMING & DEVELOPMENT

WHAT SHE'S LOOKING FOR:
The NBCU cable network programs for a handful of lifestyle sub-genres – fashion, beauty, celeb style, stylish living (home, design, entertaining, food, travel) and “aspirational” lifestyle. Weidman says she’s looking to develop both docuseries and formatted programming across those categories.

TAKES UN SolicITED PITCHES?:
No.

TARGET AUDIENCE:
Women 18-49 with a sweet spot of 18-34.

TREATMENT OR TAPE?
Tape if it’s a docuseries based on talent.

HOW TO PITCH:
Weidman says: “Be prepared to explain what elements of the format distinguish your idea from similar formats already in the marketplace.” Her development team handles incoming pitches.

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
Have a clear POV and showcase a unique editing style in the clip, prove the talent is a “one-of-a-kind, must-have” character, and tease Weidman and team enough to leave them wanting more.

SUNDANCE CHANNEL
MARCO BRESAZ
VP, ORIGINAL PROGRAMMING AND DEVELOPMENT

WHAT HE'S LOOKING FOR:
The key elements of Sundance’s creative filter include: The Pursuit of Living a True Life, Emotional Immersion, Authenticity and Social Conversation. “By ‘Social Conversation,’ we mean doing shows that are truly about something, shows that tap into larger issues we’re all concerned with in an accessible and entertaining way,” says Bresaz.

“Our audience is looking for television that engages and adds value to their lives,” he adds. “They want to watch television that respects their intelligence while entertaining them.”

TAKES UNSOLICITED PITCHES?:
No.

TARGET DEMO:
Adults 35-44, with a slight female skew.

TREATMENT OR TAPE?:
Both.

HOW TO PITCH:
Credited producers and/or their agents can contact Alex Schwarm, coordinator, original programming and development, via Alex.Schwarm@sundancechannel.com. “Each project is different, but we do prefer one sheets and tape,” says Bresaz. “Tape is especially helpful for character-based projects.”

THE RIGHT SIZZLE FOR SUNDANCE:
“A great sizzle has great characters, takes you into a unique world or experience, and tells an interesting story while hitting the key points of our filters;” he says. “A great sizzle stands out by surprising and being different than so much of the more predictable projects that come through our door.”
“Paper is required for every project submitted, including a fully formulated breakdown and examples when appropriate. Tape is a must for character-driven projects.”

“Skews 50-50 male-female, targets 18-49 demo.”

“Takes unsolicited pitches?”

“No.”

“What he’s looking for:

“We are constantly looking for programming that helps our audience believe the unbelievable,” says Krubsack. Innovative paranormal shows featuring characters that are skeptical, such as Ghost Hunters and Destination Truth, as well as programs featuring people who use creativity and imagination to bring extraordinary ideas to life, such as Face Off, work well for the net. Krubsack says Syfy is also keen on formats that put people through “an extreme ride” (Total Blackout) or that document extreme experiences (Paranormal Witness).

“How to pitch:

If Syfy doesn’t already have a relationship with you, or if you don’t have an agent, you can email Tori Socha (tori.socha@nbcuni.com), the director of alternative programming, for a submission release form before sending any materials. Socha will guide producers to the right person for their pitches.

“Pitching don’ts:

“As you can imagine, we’ve seen every ghost hunting group under the sun,” he says, adding that unless your paranormal sleuths inhabit worlds different than the ones currently on air and use unique methodologies, it will be hard to put them on the channel.

“Volume of series:

Most commissioned series are six hour-long episodes, though he is open to 30-minute shows.

“Sizzle reel tips:

“A strong sense of characters and example storylines that you could see in series are a must,” he says. “It’s important to hit tone, as well. The sizzle reel needs to convince us that you can make the series, and please try to keep it under three minutes.”

“We’ve seen every ghost hunting group under the sun.”
Looking for general adult programming with a dual skew. The demo is primarily female 18-49 but the net can be watched by the entire family. Submit via producers.discovery.com.

TARGET DEMO:
Looking for series about fascinating families, extreme behaviors, larger-than-life characters or an insider’s view of a hidden subculture. “Our brand transcends one specific genre,” says Flynn. “That said, we are the leader in wedding programming and are always looking for new ways to share those stories. We like to be first to market and have a show that appeals to both male and female viewers.”

The net recently greenlit a docuseries following baseball player Pete Rose and his fiancée, and is also set to air a show about the world’s smallest siblings called Big Tiny, the real estate competition series Four Houses, a second season of American Gypsy Wedding, the one-hour competitive cheerleading special Cheer Perfection and specials based on reality series Virgin Diaries.

HOW TO PITCH:
“Know what works for us, but don’t just duplicate what we already have,” says Flynn. “Be prepared and be able to back up the pitch but get to the point. Also, learn how to take a pass or a ‘no,’ and don’t try to convince us we’re wrong when that’s the answer.”

WHAT THEY PAY:
“Everything is different,” says Savitsky. “We can start with an airable pilot, we can order a limited series or we can go right into a full series order. The pricing, of course, changes based on the details of the show, but a general ballpark would be $300,000 an hour.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
A good sizzle should grab the commissioners’ attention within the first few minutes and leave them wanting more. “If it’s a family or a strong character, show us a range of their lives, and convince us they’re great on camera,” explains Savitsky. “We need to know that there’s potential for a lot more based on what’s on that tape, so be smart and thorough.”

We can start with an airable pilot, order a limited series or go right into a full series order.

TLC

MARIANA FLYNN, AMY SAVITSKY

VICE PRESIDENTS, DEVELOPMENT

WHAT THEY’RE LOOKING FOR:
TLC is looking for series about fascinating families, extreme behaviors, larger-than-life characters or an insider’s view of a hidden subculture. “Our brand transcends one specific genre,” says Flynn. “That said, we are the leader in wedding programming and are always looking for new ways to share those stories. We like to be first to market and have a show that appeals to both male and female viewers.”

The net recently greenlit a docuseries following baseball player Pete Rose and his fiancée, and is also set to air a show about the world’s smallest siblings called Big Tiny, the real estate competition series Four Houses, a second season of American Gypsy Wedding, the one-hour competitive cheerleading special Cheer Perfection and specials based on reality series Virgin Diaries.

HOW TO PITCH:
“Know what works for us, but don’t just duplicate what we already have,” says Flynn. “Be prepared and be able to back up the pitch but get to the point. Also, learn how to take a pass or a ‘no,’ and don’t try to convince us we’re wrong when that’s the answer.”

WHAT THEY PAY:
“Everything is different,” says Savitsky. “We can start with an airable pilot, we can order a limited series or we can go right into a full series order. The pricing, of course, changes based on the details of the show, but a general ballpark would be $300,000 an hour.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
A good sizzle should grab the commissioners’ attention within the first few minutes and leave them wanting more. “If it’s a family or a strong character, show us a range of their lives, and convince us they’re great on camera,” explains Savitsky. “We need to know that there’s potential for a lot more based on what’s on that tape, so be smart and thorough.”

We can start with an airable pilot, order a limited series or go right into a full series order.

TLC

MARIANA FLYNN, AMY SAVITSKY

VICE PRESIDENTS, DEVELOPMENT

WHAT THEY’RE LOOKING FOR:
TLC is looking for series about fascinating families, extreme behaviors, larger-than-life characters or an insider’s view of a hidden subculture. “Our brand transcends one specific genre,” says Flynn. “That said, we are the leader in wedding programming and are always looking for new ways to share those stories. We like to be first to market and have a show that appeals to both male and female viewers.”

The net recently greenlit a docuseries following baseball player Pete Rose and his fiancée, and is also set to air a show about the world’s smallest siblings called Big Tiny, the real estate competition series Four Houses, a second season of American Gypsy Wedding, the one-hour competitive cheerleading special Cheer Perfection and specials based on reality series Virgin Diaries.

HOW TO PITCH:
“Know what works for us, but don’t just duplicate what we already have,” says Flynn. “Be prepared and be able to back up the pitch but get to the point. Also, learn how to take a pass or a ‘no,’ and don’t try to convince us we’re wrong when that’s the answer.”

WHAT THEY PAY:
“Everything is different,” says Savitsky. “We can start with an airable pilot, we can order a limited series or we can go right into a full series order. The pricing, of course, changes based on the details of the show, but a general ballpark would be $300,000 an hour.”

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
A good sizzle should grab the commissioners’ attention within the first few minutes and leave them wanting more. “If it’s a family or a strong character, show us a range of their lives, and convince us they’re great on camera,” explains Savitsky. “We need to know that there’s potential for a lot more based on what’s on that tape, so be smart and thorough.”

We can start with an airable pilot, order a limited series or go right into a full series order.
One-sheets are good, but tape really helps sell an idea and can cut through a lot of clutter and time.

The network currently skews more male, but shows should appeal to both male and female viewers.

“We will look at hours, but we’re focusing mainly on half-hours.”

Our audience reacts well to credible, likable talent.

“TREATMENTS OR TAPE?:

“One-sheets are good, but tape really helps sell an idea and can cut through a lot of clutter and time.”

TARGET DEMO:
The network currently skews more male, but shows should appeal to both male and female viewers.

HOURS OR HALF-HOURS?

“We will look at hours, but we’re focusing mainly on half-hours.”

“WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:

Singer says his programming mission is to establish Travel Channel as the pre-eminent travel brand on the media landscape and “re-imagine travel entertainment.” He points to Hotel Impossible as a “perfect fit” for the net, as it “exposes viewers to the world of travel, has a credible host and expert in Anthony Melchiorri and is both highly entertaining and information-rich.” Also, Baggage Battles ticks the boxes as it goes behind the scenes at airport auctions – events that Travel Channel viewers can actually attend – and features auction experts who are both entertaining and likable.

Singer is also looking for key elements of travel to be part of a program’s DNA: exploration (as seen in Bizarre Foods America), destination (as seen in Trip Flip), and industry (as seen in Hotel Impossible and Airport 24/7: Miami). Destination-oriented shows must be contemporary and not travelog-styled, and “it must expose our audience to places or experiences they can’t find in a guidebook.” Exploration programming should have a distinct POV and a credible host, and industry-oriented shows should “take an aspect of the travel world and make it accessible and interesting to our audience.” Half-hour formats that can be ordered in bulk will also be considered if they’re the right fit.

“HOW TO PITCH:

Producers can submit pitches to Bethany Latham, development manager, via Bethany.Latham@travelchannel.com.

“PITCHING DON’T’S:

Don’t assume that Travel Channel only wants travelogs (it doesn’t), or that it wants to be pitched everything you’re also pitching to its competitors (again, it doesn’t). Also, don’t assume that the Scripps-owned net only wants characters, as it’s quite keen on authoritative talent.

“Our audience reacts well to credible, likable talent that can take them on a journey and entertain them along the way,” says Singer. “Don’t look at talent from one angle. Journalists, pilots, tour guides, professors and soldiers might all be untapped resources.”

“SIZZLE TIPS:

Shoot and edit it well, and provide a clear concept of the show. And if you’re featuring your on-air talent, Singer cautions, “we need to see them in-situation as if they were in a show. Reels that have talent presenting their bio to camera are of little use.”

BW”
TRUTV

MARISSA RONCA
VICE PRESIDENT OF DEVELOPMENT

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
Since truTV’s programming has an element of comic relief, as seen in such series as Impractical Jokers, Ronca says the net definitely wants more “comedic reality” projects that combine humor with authenticity. The team is also looking for shows to complement its high-rated series Lizard Lick Towing and Hardcore Pawn.
Core elements for a pitch to truTV should include “unexpected characters, comic relief, conflict and a level of outrageousness,” she says.

HOW TO PITCH:
truTV’s Mat Baxt or Paul Hardy can vet anything from a presentation tape to a one-line concept and let you know if you’re on the right track, or if it’s a pass and why. A show bible isn’t necessary at the pitch stage, but you should have a clear format broken down or tape of the characters.

WHAT SHE WANTS IN A SIZZLE REEL:
“I know I keep using the word ‘unexpected,’ but the truth is that we see a lot of sizzle reels, and there’s nothing like seeing a concept, world, or character that we’ve never seen before,” she explains.

WE TV

LAUREN GELLERT
SENIOR VICE PRESIDENT, ORIGINAL PRODUCTIONS & DEVELOPMENT

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
“We tv is all about family and the family dynamic – the drama, humor, conflict, and incredible relationships people share when they’re forced to live or work together,” says Gellert. “Each original series is an unfiltered showcase of characters who are bold, compelling and have a juicy and relatable story to share.” She points to Braxton Family Values, Joan & Melissa: Joan Knows Best?, and Mary Mary as examples.
But if you don’t have a celeb at the center, it’s not necessarily a deal-breaker, as Gellert says “a WE tv original gives viewers a relatable, unfiltered view of the drama and chaos and humor that’s inherent in these family situations.”

HOW TO PITCH:
Remember that WE tv only accepts pitches from “reputable lawyers, agents, managers, producers and production companies.” If you fit that criteria, check the network’s submission policy as stated on www.wetv.com and be sure to familiarize yourself with the net’s content while there. “Memorable characters with big personalities” are wanted; shows that would appeal to men or that are similar to what it’s aired in the past aren’t.
WEATHER CHANNEL

MARY ELLEN IWATA
VP, ORIGINAL CONTENT & DEVELOPMENT

TAKES UNSOLICITED PITCHES?:
Yes, "as long as the producer has a track record of producing for a major cable or broadcast channel." Include credits.

CONTACT:
meiwata@weather.com.

SERIES OR ONE-OFFS?:
Half-hour series.

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
Iwata says The Weather Channel is "broadening our appeal while staying true to our weather roots," so in addition to those looking for the long-range forecast, the net is also programming for "weather enthusiasts" or, as Iwata puts it, "an upscale audience of ‘doers,’ who are fascinated by all things outdoors." Coast Guard Alaska has the biggest overall ratings in the P25-49 demo, while Lifeguard! is bringing in more women, and Ice Pilots is attracting more upscale, higher income households.

HOW TO PITCH:
Iwata prefers a brief online or one-pager but if talent is featured then video helps. "If the characters have not been cast yet and we really like the concept, we can commission a character or sizzle reel," she says. "Producers should think outside the box and not worry too much about ‘the weather’ being front and center," adds Iwata. "If we like the idea, and it feels right for the brand, we’ll work with the producer to find the weather connection."
Contact Info:
www.cbc.ca/independentproducers/genres/doc_zone/

Sizzle Reel Necessary:
No.

Target Demo/Audience:
A general audience evenly split between men and women, well educated.

“What he’s looking for:
‘Doc Zone’, hosted and narrated by Ann-Marie MacDonald, is CBC’s flagship anthology documentary series, airing Thursday nights at 9 p.m. on CBC TV. It commissions approximately 13 one-hour documentaries from Canadian independent producers.

“As a rule, we are looking for one-off documentaries and we try to spread our commissions across all regions of the country,” says Claydon. “As an anthology series, we tackle a broad range of subjects, but all of our stories must be viewer-centric. By that, I mean the stories must relate to our audience and the world they live in.”

Some docs focus on family, relationships, the environment, technology and social trends, as well as water cooler topics and stories behind the headlines. Crime stories rate well, as do disaster stories.

“This past season, we did well with docs like Facebook Follies, which dealt with the crazy things and the trouble people get into with social media,” he says. “We also did well with Apocalypse 2012, an end-of-the-world story, naturally!”

“Our docs have high production values, are elegantly done and are entertaining as well as informative.”

The strand doesn’t run POV docs, biographies, or foreign affairs stories.

How to Pitch:
“In pitching ‘Doc Zone’, we ask that producers be flexible and willing to work closely with us to get the pitch where we need it,” says Claydon. “My pet peeve is a pitch that clearly is out of our strike zone, in that it doesn’t reflect any understanding of our series. Thankfully, we don’t get too many of those! We also don’t mind considering an idea that has reached a full proposal stage, again because we usually work with the producers to shape the final proposal.”

What it Pays:
Budgets vary widely, depending on the subject matter, but all ‘Doc Zone’ commissions utilize Canada Media Fund (CMF) funding, as well as other broadcast incentive funds such as Rogers or any regional funds. Claydon says his team also expects to see a producer investment or distribution advance in the budget. International coproductions are encouraged. A typical ‘Doc Zone’ budget is in the CDN$300,000 – $500,000 range.

Michael Claydon
Area Executive Producer, Independent Documentaries
CBC ‘Doc Zone’

We ask that producers be flexible and willing to work closely with us.”
Jennifer Dettman, manager of development, via factualpitch@cbc.ca.

One- to two-pagers are fine; tape is good for character-driven projects.

Don’t pitch something that’s “too niche – that belongs on a specialty network.”

“...we place a lot of emphasis on the second screen experience.”

Executive in Charge of Factual Entertainment

Jennifer Dettman

What She’s Looking For:
“We plan to build on the success of our primetime programming strategy and continue to look for large-scale reality and live event programming such as music performance, talent, game, constructed reality and social experiment television shows,” says Dettman, of the factual entertainment department at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. “In short – big, broad-based family entertainment with multi-platform possibilities.”

As examples, she points to Over the Rainbow, a competition series that seeks to find the perfect Dorothy for the upcoming Andrew Lloyd Webber production of The Wizard of Oz. Business reality series click with Canadian audiences, as seen with the Ceeb’s version of the hit format Dragon’s Den, and the pubcaster is adding another one to the sked, with The Big Decision, in which business icons Jim Treliving and Arlene Dickinson assess two struggling companies and decide which one, if any, to help.

“We’re also focused on reinventing performing arts programming, striving to broaden its appeal,” she adds. “And we continue to look for low-cost additions to our daytime schedule.”

As for volume, “We’re looking for continuing and repeatable series. Eight to 10 episodes for hours; 10 to 13 episodes for half-hours.”

Producers should also take note of the network’s multi-platform ambitions. “As a modern public broadcaster, the need to engage with our audiences beyond the television show is so important,” she says. “We look for programming that not only entertains audiences but also can unite them in a national conversation or collective experience. We don’t just produce stand-alone shows anymore, we’re creating entire experiences. For that reason we place a lot of emphasis on the second screen experience.” Dettman points to last spring’s Canada’s Smartest Person and the upcoming Over the Rainbow as examples of how the net aims to extend properties to multiple screens.

How to Pitch:
A signed submission release has to accompany each pitch and can be found at the department’s independent producers’ website, www.cbc.ca/independentproducers/genres/factual_entertainment.

Sizzle Tips:
“Short and snappy” wins for Dettman. “Don’t feel like you have to tell us the entire story – that’s what the one-pager is for. Make it entertaining and emotionally engaging.” BW
“We’re always looking beyond the home.”

WHAT THEY’RE LOOKING FOR:
For W, Bianchi’s looking for a range of reality programming containing big characters, high stakes and drama with a touch of humor. Recent successes include Love It or List It, Property Brothers, Come Dine with Me and Undercover Boss Canada.

“Love it or List it and Property Brothers represent our home programming but we are always looking beyond the home, as evidenced with Undercover Boss, which has opened a whole new world for us,” she says. “We are exploring concepts that could work as companions to Undercover Boss Canada. At the same time we recently launched a hidden camera game show format, Deal With It, that we are also very excited about.”

She’s not in the market for weddings, relationships, fashion or beauty programming.

For OWN Canada’s second year, true crime doc series bring in viewers, as proven by the programs Devil You Know and Murder She Solved, both currently in third season production. In addition, social experiment reality programming, such as Million Dollar Neighbourhood, has performed well for the network.

“Now in our second year we have a better sense of what has worked for our audience and will continue on that path,” says Bianchi. “We’re not looking for anything too ‘on the nose’ for the OWN brand. There needs to be an element of the unexpected.”

Both W and OWN Canada target women in the 25-54 age demo.

HOW TO PITCH:
All pitches must be submitted via email, as Corus is no longer accepting mailed pitches. Corus Original Programming has a submissions website (www.corusoriginalprogramming.com) that has information for outside producers wishing to submit their proposals. Original programming coordinator Danielle Berger handles all the new submissions that come in for the unscripted networks.

WHAT THEY PAY:
From CDN$50,000 (US$49,700) per half-hour and up depending on the concept.

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
“The sizzle must sell the concept but it doesn’t have to cost a lot. If your concept features specific talent, show us what they do, why they are the best choice.”

KA
Pitching guidelines can be found at knowledge.ca/producers.

Both. Inter-provincial and international treaty copros are welcome, but for the latter, ownership needs to remain with the Canadian producer.

CONTACT INFO:

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
Knowledge Network is British Columbia’s 24-hour arts and culture network and public educational broadcaster. It commissions original docs for its flagship strand ‘Storyville’ – inspired by the BBC strand of the same name – a two-hour slot that accommodates both feature length and one-hour films.

Knowledge accepts proposals from producers across Canada but preference is given to producers from British Columbia, as well as pre-buy and acquired programming from around the world. Proposals must come from an incorporated company.

“Our priority is for filmmaker-driven creative documentaries that entertain, enlighten and challenge our viewers,” says Battle. “We will consider arts documentaries if they go beyond the traditional biopic and reflect larger social themes. The priority is to find strong stories that will engage our audience and stand the test of time.”

WHAT THEY PAY:
The network’s license fees are meant to represent only a portion of a total budget, according to the producer’s portal. On first window commissions, Knowledge might invest up to CDN$60,000 in license fees and will negotiate a role in development and production. Second window is up to $10,000 for projects which have secured a lead broadcaster elsewhere in Canada. KR

“‘The priority is to find strong stories that will stand the test of time.’"
Target demo for Shaw’s specialty audiences is 25-54 adults, and for Slice it’s 25-54 women. For broadcast channel Global it’s the 18-49 demo. “With Canadian programming we are looking at the whole 2+. We like to know how many Canadians across the board are watching us,” says Shipton.

No.

TAKES UNSOLICITED PITCHES?:

 CONTACT INFO:

For lifestyle pitches, try Brynn Tschirhart at Brynn.Tschirhart@shawmedia.ca or Deirdre Finn at deirdre.finn@shawmedia.ca. For factual pitches, email Patricia DiGiovanni at patricia.digiovanni@shawmedia.ca.

WHAT MAKES A SIZZLE REEL HOT:

“We accept pitches in all forms but if it is a character-driven pitch, seeing that person on tape and hopefully interacting with others in their world is always compelling,” says Morgan. “We’ve gotten a bit wary of the slick sizzle reel that is cut together to impress but the characters don’t hold up when you watch an actual scene with them.”

“If you’re presenting characters, you want to make sure you’ve shown some vulnerability,” adds Shipton. “Show them in their everyday life and then some quiet moments. It will show a range of the person.”

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE
Food Network Canada commissions about 140 hours of original Canadian programming per year with a focus on big, primetime reality and competition shows such as recent hits Top Chef Canada, which is going into its third season, and Recipe To Riches, as well as host-driven fare such as You Gotta Eat Here. Commissioners are generally looking for ongoing series rather than one-offs, and character-driven rather than instructional programs.

“We accept pitches in all forms but characters/hosts are very important, so even a short demo tape is very helpful,” says Morgan. “Most orders are for 14 or 26 episodes. Because we do a lot of 30-minute shows, we try to commission with a delivery schedule that is very tight and will allow us to air two episodes back-to-back on a weekly basis. We are very open to coproduction.”

For factual content for Shaw’s broadcast network, Shipton and her team commission docs from indie prodcos for the one-off documentary strand ‘Close Up.’ They look for films that fit the strand’s tagline: “Hidden worlds, personal obsessions and things that drive us.”

“They’re unusual worlds that are right in our community,” describes Shipton.

On the entertainment side, Global’s team looks for shows with a national appeal – either shows that take viewers across the country or characters that all Canadians will connect with. “It can’t be too place-specific,” she advises.

CONTINUED ON NEXT PAGE
SHAW MEDIA (CONTINUED)

HGTV CANADA

Highly formatted, repeatable shows tend to work well on HGTV Canada, which skews about 60% female. The network commissions about 200 hours of original programming per year with an emphasis on home-centric shows, real estate and renovation. Most orders are 14- to 26-episode, half-hour series, and the network regularly enters into copros with its U.S. Scripps-owned counterpart and broadcasters in the UK. Recent hits include Massive Moves, House of Bryan and Income Property. “We are looking to expand the range of shows beyond what is traditionally associated with home and garden,” says Morgan, pointing to recently greenlit series House Hazards, which humorously explores how things can go wrong in the average person’s home. Host-driven shows such as Holmes Makes It Right starring reno-man-to-the-rescue Mike Holmes continue to do well on HGTV Canada. “We are all in the business of making shows to draw the biggest audiences possible and we don’t want to exclude great ideas that might not immediately fit,” she adds. “We’re also trying to challenge producers to think beyond what has been seen as lifestyle programming in the past.”

SLICE NETWORK

Relationship-focused series and unique family situations are big with Slice viewers. Top programs include My Teenage Wedding and Real Housewives of Vancouver, which was just renewed for a second season. The network will also jump into the high-concept format space when Big Brother Canada debuts in 2013. Recent commissions include bridal show Keasha’s Perfect Dress and The Mistress, a series hosted by infidelity expert Sarah Symonds. Shipton says Slice is looking to broaden its programming so that it’s not so female-skewing. She cites Teen Weddings as a fitting example, more about family dynamics than nuptials, and the upcoming Big Brother Canada, which is “one of the broadest concepts you can do.” Slice commissions about 100 hours of original Canadian programs every year. Most orders are for 14- to 26-half-hour episodes.

RADARSCREEN THE GLOBAL PITCH GUIDE

APRIL 25–MAY 5, 2013
CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DOCUMENTARY FESTIVAL

SUBMIT YOUR FILM!
Film submissions accepted beginning September 2012.

hotdocsforum
Renowned two-day pitching event! Project submissions accepted beginning November 2012.

the doc shop
Year-round online doc market offering access to more than 1200 titles from around the world.

WWW.HOTDOCS.CA
Vision TV

Joan Jenkinson

Vice President, Independent Production & Multi-Faith Content, ZoomerMedia

What She’s Looking For:
Jenkinson is commissioning independent productions for three strands, and is looking for one-off and limited documentary series, half-hour supernatural and paranormal documentary series, and half-hour gospel music programs, all with religion at the core.

For the first strand, she’s looking for religion as it intersects with science, archaeology, politics and world events, and cites as examples The Jesus Discovery, a doc on the earliest evidence of Jesus’ resurrection after death; Temple Mount, a three-part series on the history and future of the Temple Mount in Jerusalem; and the three-part series The Church of Elvis, on how faith influenced the music icon, and how he inspired near religious adulation among his fans.

Pitching Tips:
“Start by emailing a short paragraph, followed by a phone conversation. If there is interest submit a full proposal,” she says. Proposals should include the region in which the producer’s company is located, logline, synopsis, treatment, CVs of the creative team, a summary of the budget, and a release form, among other details outlined online at www.visiontv.ca/about-vision/producer-guidelines. Also, “don’t forget to identify upfront the genre, length and number of episodes.”

What They Pay:
License fees range from CDN$20,000 to $45,000 per half-hour and CDN$30,000 to $75,000 per hour.

How To Make A Smoking Sizzle Reel:
“Sizzle reels should be treated like mini-programs – with a beginning, middle and end. Only use clips that present subjects delivering the best possible performance.”

CONTACT INFO:
proposals@zoomermedia.ca

TREATMENT OR TAPE:
Both are welcome.

TARGET DEMO/AUDIENCE:
45+ (with the majority over 60).

“Sizzle reels should be treated like mini-programs.”
Our audience is really loyal so the expectation on fresh content is pretty high.

"Second to that, it needs to be an absolutely gripping story," she says. "I talk about crime drama a lot, but the twists and turns of the story, the cliffhangers [and] those mystery elements are ones we try to apply to our documentaries as well."

While much of the programming for the channel tends to come from North America and the UK, she’s keen to acquire European crime stories for A+E Networks’ European feed. “We’re really on the lookout for producers and distribution companies to come to us with their local crime content,” she offers. “That’s one of our big priorities.”

She mostly orders series, usually a six- to 10-episode run, while specials need to be well-known crime stories in order to stand out in the schedule. Anastasi cites Jupiter Entertainment’s Snapped: Women Who Kill as a breakout hit.

As for Bio, it’s primarily an acquisitions channel at the moment. A lot of content tends to come from the U.S. sister network, but original series A Gypsy Life for Me was its highest rated to date, and production has begun on season two.

PITCHING DON'TS:
She isn’t interested in very male-skewing programming, as well as “caught on camera” shows.

HOW TO PITCH:
“We need a topline, and I’m happy to give feedback to a topline idea. Beyond that, a couple of pages and I don’t need a huge PDF or anything like that.”

WHAT THEY PAY:
Commissioning starts at around the £35,000 (US$54,900) mark to about £50,000 per hour.
Charlotte Moore seeks out a broad range of documentary singles and series across all four BBC channels, “from observational to presenter-led, authored, director-led films and lightly formatted programs,” she explains. “Our focus is very much a British audience, so the majority of what I commission is domestic or exploring the world through the eyes of a British presenter, but there are exceptions if the subject feels universally relevant – for example Welcome to Lagos or Amish: A Secret Life.”

Projects for the BBC should inform as well as entertain, she says. “I’m not looking for pure entertainment. I’m looking for original and innovative – not derivative – ideas underpinned with a strong sense of purpose; ideas that feel timely and relevant, that provoke our audience to challenge their prejudices and preconceptions, or inspire viewers to reappraise their views.”

She adds that there is room for wit and humor (with titles such as The Tube), for hybrid forms (Volcano Live, The Secret History of Our Streets) and for very different types of programming. “Although more traditional forms of documentary are at the heart of what we do, we are interested in innovating with form,” she explains.

HOW TO PITCH:

“Don’t send me a long list of ideas, send one idea at a time and you’re bound to get a quicker response,” Moore offers. “Don’t try to pitch an idea when all you’re really pitching is access to someone or somewhere. I want to know why you want to make the film, what the film will be saying, why you think it feels timely and current, what your attitude or angle is on the subject and what the underlying purpose of the documentary would be,” she adds. “Do send taster tapes – they help bring the idea to life, show the tone and attitude of the film, and often cut through the vast quantities of paper proposals we receive.”

As for the process, Moore says producers should email her or any member of the docs team via the addresses cited, with brief outlines within the body of the email and fuller proposals attached if available. “But please also log all ideas on our online e-commissioning system as well to ensure your idea doesn’t get lost in our overcrowded inboxes,” she adds.

---

CONTACTS:

charlotte.moore@bbc.co.uk;
samantha.anstiss@bbc.co.uk (BBC1 & 2);
maxine.watson@bbc.co.uk (BBC 1);
emma.willis@bbc.co.uk (BBC 2 & 4);
clare.paterson1@bbc.co.uk (BBC4)

All pitches need to be logged onto the BBC’s commissioning site:
https://ssl.bbc.co.uk/ecommissioning/

---

“Original and innovative ideas underpinned with a strong sense of purpose.”
“Any program is going to be a bit of a journey from concept to execution.”

UNITED KINGDOM

CHANNEL 4

NICK MIRSKY
DEPUTY HEAD OF FACTUAL

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
Mirsky says the C4 audience wants “wit, warmth, intelligence, immediacy, drama, realism – delivered in an entertaining and surprising way.”

Mirsky says he’d like big series that reflect modern life and worlds in a warm, entertaining and engaging manner, such as Educating Essex, One Born Every Minute and 24 Hours in A&E. He’s also on the lookout for what he dubs “talking point TV,” or provocative and thought-provoking content with a point of view, such as Making Bradford British. For the 11 p.m. slot, Mirsky is in need of edgy documentaries about popular life, such as Bouncers, while for the ‘True Stories’ strand, he wants “extraordinary and authored stories.” (See more on page 39.) New directing talent is key for ‘First Cut,’ and dramatic and insightful documentaries about contemporary life are best for ‘Cutting Edge.’

“Note that we do fund development for ideas that we think have potential. So companies can bring us ideas with a view to talking about a possible development phase,” he adds.

PITCHING DON’TS:
“It’s not great when you feel people are only trying to second guess what they think you might [want],” he says. “It is really important that people who pitch believe in their projects.”

Also, don’t be too dogmatic and don’t oversell. “Any program is going to be a bit of a journey from concept to execution,” Mirsky offers. “Show that you are aware there may be adjustments on that road.”

THE PAY SCALE:
Pricing, of course, varies according to projects. ‘First Cut’ docs are commissioned at £100,000 (US$157,000) per episode. Other programs usually cost between £150,000-£180,000. Series volumes range from two episodes to 11.

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:
Mirsky maintains that sizzles should feature characters, wit, humor, privileged access and “the promise of very watchable actuality.”

CONTACT:
For series:
Nick Mirsky (nmirsky@channel4.co.uk), assistant (mhjili@channel4.co.uk), and Mark Raphael (mpraphael@channel4.co.uk), assistant (jhone@channel4.co.uk).

For ‘Cutting Edge’ and other singles:
Emma Cooper (ecooper@channel4.co.uk).

For ‘True Stories’/ singles:
Anna Miralis (amiralis@channel4.co.uk).

For ‘First Cut’/ singles:
Lina Prestwood (lprestwood@channel4.co.uk), assistants (jhone@channel4.co.uk, agrrewal@channel4.co.uk).
C4 (CONTINUED)

JILL FULLERTON-SMITH
COMMISSIONING EDITOR, SPECIALIST FACTUAL (SCIENCE)

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
Fullerton-Smith says she’s in need of “bold ideas about the science of our every day – programs that make the ordinary extraordinary.” Pitched projects can be on anything from the weather and food, to architecture and the home, or engineering and technology. Fullerton-Smith also lets on that she’s always looking for “awkward, reputational ideas” such as Mummifying Alan.

The factual science programming also needs to be content-led with a new way of telling the science.

PITCHING “DON’T S”:
Don’t pitch pseudo-science. Fullerton-Smith says the worst pitches she hears are in the vein of: “We are going to convince you homeopathy works.”

THE PAY SCALE:
C4’s specialist factual division has a large range, so she says there are many different tariffs, and it is always prepared to find money for big ideas with ambition.

ANNA MIRALIS
COMMISSIONING EDITOR, ‘TRUE STORIES’

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
For the ‘True Stories’ strand, Miralis looks for 10 films a year. “I look for stand-out ‘stranger than fiction’ narratives and unique authored takes on hidden worlds and communities in Britain and abroad,” she says. “Generally a tabloid headline with a very authored take.” The strand also airs a small number of theatrical docs.

“The programs need to be singular, get noticed and feel very C4,” she adds. While budgets vary, Miralis says the range can be “between £70,000-£200,000.”

HOW TO PITCH:
Send an email with a brief outline and sizzle if possible. Check the website address to the left for more details. Be sure to watch some of the strand’s recent titles to become familiar with the tone and type of films being commissioned.

TARGET DEMO:
ABC1

TARGET AUDIENCE:
ABC1s and 18-34 year-olds. “Generally, heavy consumers of documentary,” says Miralis.

CONTACT:
www.channel4.com/info/commissioning

WEBSITE:
www.channel4.com/info/commissioning/4producers/documentaries
“We’re not finger-waggy or here to tell you what to do.”
HEAD OF FACTUAL AND FEATURES

CEILIA TAYLOR

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:

As head of factual and features, Taylor oversees unscripted content for the pay-TV network’s portfolio of premium channels, which include Sky1, Sky Living, Sky Arts and Sky Atlantic.

For Sky1, she’s commissioning a genre she dubs “funny factual,” as seen in An Idiot Abroad, and low-cost access series. For Sky Atlantic, which recently announced plans for its ‘Footprints’ doc strand and a Nutopia-produced series on British history, she’s after talent-fronted documentary series, and finds that smart and entertaining programs such as Networks of Power work well for the channel. For Sky Arts, Taylor’s in search of big multi-platform ideas. Lastly, for Sky Living, she’d like returnable formats and series ideas.

“We want broad but not bland. Populist but not dumb. Glossy not grimy,” Taylor says. “Ideas can be mainstream but they do need personality, emotion and a sense of spirit.”

AUDIENCES:

Taylor says Sky Living is aiming to skew younger, while the Sky Atlantic audience expects high quality intelligent programming. Sky1 features mainstream family viewing, and Sky Arts serves “passionate niche audiences,” with content such as opera, but the aim is to grow and broaden that audience as well.

PITCHING DON’TS:

Don’t pitch one-offs, or ideas that aren’t terrestrial in their scale or ambition.

SIZZLE REEL TIPS:

“If it’s a character based ob-doc, [tape] is the quickest way to get people to understand and love the idea,” she says. For sizzle reels, she’s expecting “something that makes me laugh, cry or go, ‘Wow.’”

“"We want broad but not bland; populist but not dumb."”
TO ORDER: COMMISSIONS AND CONTENT

SHIRANI SABARATNAM
COMMISSIONING EDITOR – LIFESTYLE

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
"Big talent passion projects that cut through our schedule" are tops for Sabaratnam, who adds that innovative projects with multi-platform elements are also appreciated. She maintains that UKTV is not looking for derivative or hybrid formats, and since repeatability is important for most of its channels, it's not looking for one-off events or live shows.

"Commissions need to stand out from our acquisitions; they need to be noisy, innovative and multi-platform," she says.

GOOD FOOD:
For Good Food, the aim for primetime is to commission big name talent and channel-defining ideas, to build on hits like Monster Munchies and Choccywoccydoodah, while factual entertainment formats need to be loud and fun with a “wow” factor. Brand-funded projects are welcome, as well as travelogs. They pay £40,000–£50,000 (US$62,800–$78,500) per hour, and £20,000–£25,000 per half hour.

HOME:
The network is looking for series ideas for 2013, with volumes ranging from 15 or 20 x 30-minute episode orders or 10 x one-hour episodes. Shows should be self-contained, repeatable, and have 360 degree appeal. Talent has to be known or credible, and the tone should be positive and aspirational. Areas the network would explore include ordinary people living in amazing homes, relocation specialists, and character-driven series, as well as established Home subject matter such as property funding, renovation, interior design, makeovers, reveals and transformations. The network isn’t interested in topical ideas tied to the property market, non-narrative property shows, gardening, antique-based shows or Come Dine With Me derivations. The channel pays £28,000 per 30-minute episode or £50,000 per one-hour.

YESTERDAY:
UKTV’s history channel Yesterday is on the lookout for documentary, factual formats and ob-docs on stories with a strong human dimension. While the heart of the channel is docs focused on the 1940s, Yesterday is interested in stretching into new areas, such as antiques with a twist, engineering or invention under pressure, heritage and genealogy. It’d also like character-led ob-docs. Its peak time pays £70,000–£90,000 per hour.

WATCH:
Lastly, entertainment channel Watch is looking to capitalize on the success of its series featuring magician Dynamo (Magician Impossible), with non-magic focused programming that can also deliver genuine, warm and celebratory entertainment. Watch is, however, also looking for other magic programming that will complement, rather than compete with, its Dynamo programming, as well as shows with extreme characters and visual spectacles. Watch tends to pay £80,000-£120,000 per hour.

PITCHING DON’TS:
“Coming to pitching meetings totally unprepared” is a big turn-off. Sabaratnam advises to read the channel briefs as posted online and watch the channels to get their respective tones, styles and feels. “Have talent attached if possible,” she adds.

SIZZLE REEL TIP:
Sizzle reels need to capture the format and talent in five to 10 minutes. If it’s an ob-doc idea, show your access to larger-than-life characters or to a community that is rarely seen on television. “Sizzle reels should totally encapsulate the tone, talent and access of the program or series that you envisage,” KA
ORF/UNIVERSUM – AUSTRIA

ANDREW SOLOMON

HEAD OF NATURAL HISTORY AND SCIENCE

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:

As part of his remit, Solomon oversees Austrian public broadcaster ORF’s ‘Universum’ strand, which airs wildlife, natural history and some science programming. “Universum” targets a family audience and a more mature demographic which appreciates and expects high production values in blue chip natural history, popular science and archaeology docs.

Among the recent successes, Solomon says “our two-parter Danube – Europe’s Amazon scored well, and high-end humans and animals, like the BBC’s Super Smart Animals, also work for our audience. Magazine and reportage styles don’t work on our slot.”

Budgets for ‘Universum’ start from €300,000 [US$371,000] per hour upwards. “‘Universum’ works best with single hours or, rarely, limited series – up to five episodes,” says Solomon.

‘Universum’ titles must have high production values and “impeccable” photography. “We prefer single hours or short series,” says Solomon. “Our family and mature audience likes fabulous images, strong stories and the occasional surprise,” Solomon explains. Docs should also be challenging enough to make the audience feel more intelligent.

HOW TO PITCH:

Pitchers “should ensure that pitches describe the film, rather than the theme.” Send all projects, sizzle reels and finished films to Birgit Weber, via the email above. Comprehensive one-pagers are welcomed, as are DVDs and downloadable trailers.

WHERE YOU’LL FIND HIM:

MIPTV, MIPCOM, Sunny Side of the Doc, Jackson Hole, Wildscreen and WCSFP.

“Our audience likes fabulous images, strong stories and the occasional surprise.”
CONTACTS:
Mette Hoffmann Meyer (meho@dr.dk), head of documentaries
Anders Bruus (anbr@dr.dk) for DR 2 and coproduction proposals
Stine Preem (stpr@dr.dk) for DR K and DR3

“Compelling characters and a strong narrative are musts for all of our programming.”
DISCOVERY NETWORKS EUROPE

SARAH THORNTON
HEAD OF PRODUCTION & DEVELOPMENT, LIFESTYLE AND ENTERTAINMENT, UK/ DISCOVERY NETWORKS EUROPE, DISCOVERY NETWORKS INTERNATIONAL

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
When it comes to its lifestyle programming, as seen on TLC International, DNI is looking for transformational series in the classic genres of body image, fashion and makeovers. The network’s most effective programming focuses on shows about people tackling relatable life challenges, such as switching careers, getting married, having kids and buying a home.

Top-performing series include My Naked Secret, What Not to Wear, Cake Boss, I Didn’t Know I Was Pregnant and American Gypsy Brides.

“The formats that work have universal themes that resonate with viewers, they are redemptive, transformative and entertaining but with takeout,” says Thornton.

“Talent is hugely important to us, both new faces and established. If established, they need to have some sort of international profile in order to give us value for money.”

WHAT NOT TO PITCH?:
Shows lacking a juicy PR hook, shows about divorce, campaign-style series or “anything too worthy.” Also be sure to avoid bringing to the table “ideas that have clearly been round the block.”

WHAT MAKES A KILLER SIZZLE:
Thornton says a sure-fire sizzle “clearly states what the format is, excites us and leaves us wanting more.”

“THE FORMATS THAT WORK ARE REDEMPTIVE, TRANSFORMATIVE AND ENTERTAINING.”

CONTACT INFO:
Try sarah_thornton@discovery.com or development producer Jules Brown at Jules_brown@discovery.com. Producers should check out the online ideas submission database producers.discovery.com

TREATMENT OR TAPE?:
Both.

TARGET DEMO/AUDIENCE:
Thornton’s nets are aimed at ages 25-45 with a female skew. Core viewer is age 35 and for co-viewing couples the target age is 29.

“...
Try elizabeth_mcintyre@discovery.com. Her assistant, Gemma Rogers, can send through a factual commissions brief when contacted at gemma_rogers@discovery.com.

For treatments, a couple of pages with "a clear mission statement" work best. For talent ideas, send through links or any footage you have. "Material shot on a phone works just as well as a carefully crafted talent sizzle."

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
For the factual-oriented channels, McIntyre says the audience is "male-skewed but increasingly co-viewing, 18-49 years old. Our viewers love facts, wit, and good stories well told with compelling characters."

With that in mind, McIntyre says she’s looking for three types of factual and specialist factual commissions to air internationally, within the genres of “engineering, cars, science, history, endurance and adventure, and combinations of those genres.”

First, she’s keen on returnable, character-led narratives such as Salvage Hunters or Wheeler Dealers, featuring amateur or professional experts.

She’s also on the lookout for returnable process-driven formats such as How Do They Do It that “dig deep into how things are made and how they operate.”

Thirdly, specials – either news-reactive such as Norway Massacre: The Killer’s Mind or “unique, epic adventures or achievements” such as World’s Toughest Drive – work well.

Core elements for Discovery factual programming include “curiosity about the world, compelling characters on personal high stakes missions, with knowledge to impart but still learning, and extraordinary locations.”

HOW TO PITCH:
Don’t send in a long, exhaustive treatment when two succinct pages will do (see “Treatment or Tape?”). And McIntyre prefers being pitched format ideas rather than subjects. “I’m looking for smart, distinct takes on heartland subject matters; ideas that will play to an international audience.”

CONTACT:

Our viewers love facts, wit and good stories well told with compelling characters.”
PLANÈTE - FRANCE

WHAT IT’S DOING:

French net Planète+ is setting aside a sizable portion of its commissioning budget to pre-buy two ambitious civilization series or docu-dramas per year, in a bid to compete in an increasingly crowded market.

Discussing his desires for international docs at Sunny Side of the Doc in La Rochelle, Olivier Stroh, the director of Canal+’s documentary channels, also said that acquisitions are important to the channel, representing around 65% of its line-up.

As for French docs, the channel is refocusing its commissioning strategy towards fewer but more high-end and off-the-beaten track titles, increasing its production budget from €1 million to €2.2 million (US$1.26 million to $2.77 million).

The two first such high-end doc commissions will arrive on air this season, one being a 4 x 52-minutes series from Gédéon Programmes about the history of Paris and its construction, which will feature CGI recreations and docu-drama elements. Planète injected €800,000 into the production.

Another event-driven doc will be The Private Life of Dictators, produced by Maria Roche and distributed by Upside Television, which Planète+ invested €300,000 in.

Next to these event-driven docs, Planète+ is working on documentaries that bring in different kinds of points of view or contributions, such as a program on French gangs featuring former gang leaders who have agreed to talk, and in another genre, Hitler my Neighbour, which looks at the rise of Hitler through the eyes of a six-year-old Jewish child who used to live next door to the tyrant.

The Planète documentary channels of Canal+ are attempting to reinforce their exclusive and original programming offerings. At Sunny Side, Stroh said Planète+ aims to broadcast “the best of French and international documentaries.” The group also runs Planète No Limit, Planète Justice and Planète Thalassa, all of which will introduce new shows and series in the fall.

As for the main Canal+ premium channel, which devotes its line-up mostly to movies and sports, the net will carry on with its strategy of 10 primetime documentaries per year, plus some in the second part of the evenings; its “Nouveaux Explorateurs” weekend strand; and the acquisition of feature-length docs featured at major festivals such as Sundance. MAB

---

RMC DÉCOUVERTE - FRANCE

WHAT IT IS:

New French documentary channel RMC Découverte is slated for a December 12 launch. The channel was granted a free-to-air license in March, as part of a bid for six new HD channels on digital terrestrial platforms broadcast all over France.

It is owned by media group Nextradio, which also runs news channel BFMTV, cabsat channel BFM Business TV, and radio station RMC.

Nextradio president Alan Weill hired Guénaëlle Troy to be RMC Découverte’s program director, with Troy having formerly held the same position at Fox International Channels in France.

WHAT IT WANTS:

“We are currently fine-tuning our editorial line,” Weill told realscreen at Sunny Side of the Doc in June, where the company was looking for some 600 hours of programming. “Our schedule will include various genres of documentaries, with strong focuses on adventure, environment, history, and science programming, which should get primetime strands.

“We are looking for all kinds of programming, from immersive docs and hosted documentaries, to docu-dramas, and we are more specifically here watching for any new international trends.”

RMC Découverte is seeking first free-to-air rights for shows, but doesn’t really mind if programming was previously broadcast on cabsat channels, “as there is not that much competition as opposed to terrestrial broadcasters.”

Under French regulations, the channel will dedicate 60% of its line-up to European fare, including 40% French programming. In addition, the channel will invest in original programming and also commission documentaries. MAB

---

Strong focuses on adventure, environment, history and science programming.
ARD/MDR – GERMANY

CLAUDIA SCHREINER
HEAD OF PROGRAM CULTURE & SCIENCE (TV)

WHAT THEY’RE LOOKING FOR:
MDR is a public service channel in the country’s eastern region. Based in Leipzig, it contributes approximately 10% of the programming to national broadcaster ARD and delivers content to Franco-German network ARTE and Central Eastern European net 3sat. It is broadcast via cable, satellite and terrestrial networks.

At MDR, Schreiner is looking for documentaries and feature docs with both regional and national appeal related to history, society and science with strong, emotional narrative arcs. Docs should have a particular focus on stories set in Eastern Europe and Russia or the former Soviet bloc. Historical stories from World War II carry big interest. Feature docs about contemporary issues should also focus on Eastern European stories. MDR also programs wildlife, ethnological and science docs that offer viewers some sort of valuable takeaway, such as "a new technique of brain surgery or the revival of fauna and flora in a polluted area," she says. "References to the region or to German research are helpful."

HOW TO PITCH:
The best approach is to email a brief outline summarizing the dramatic approach and storyline with links to trailers, and information regarding your previous work.

Commissions range from €35,000-€200,000 (US$43,000-$246,000) and €15,000-€100,000 for one-offs and coproductions.

As for pitching strategies, Schreiner says success will be had with simplicity. "Be focused. Don’t talk too long, write too many pages or explain too much." KR

"Be focused. Don’t talk too long, write too many pages or explain too much."
ZDF – GERMANY

CHANNEL BREAKDOWN:
Factual programming is aired on the main channel ZDF, the satellite network 3sat, Franco-German network ARTE, and digital channels ZDFneo, ZDFinfo, and ZDFkultur.

DEPARTMENTS:
ZDF’s content is commissioned by editors in various departments, which include contemporary history, current affairs, environmental affairs, culture and science.

WHAT THEY PROGRAM:
As seen in the brochure “Factual Programming on ZDF,” available to producers via the ZDF Enterprises website at www.zdf-enterprises.de/en/coproductions/coproductions/documentaries, the German public broadcaster airs numerous documentary strands, including weekly doc broadcasts in two prime time slots.

In giving the genre such prominence, ZDF also sets high standards for what it airs. Top-notch visual quality, air-tight research and keen attention to the narrative element are requirements.

Contemporary history commissions air on Tuesdays at 8:15 pm, with approximately 22 x 45-minute programs and 3 x 90-minute shows slated over the course of a year. The majority of these are ZDF in-house productions and commissions, with the remaining 20% being coproductions and acquisitions. Another history slot, ‘ZDF History,’ airs repeats of primetime series and acquisitions on Sunday nights at 11 p.m. Examples of recent history fare include Secrets of the Third Reich and Busting the Berlin Wall.

Approximately 40 current affairs specials also air in the earlier Tuesday night slot. Thity of those come from the department of current affairs, and the remainder from ZDF’s history department. Of these, 20 are commissioned and the remainder is in-house production. The strand airs on Sundays at 1:30 p.m., and the majority of the 37 x 28-minute programs are in-house productions and acquisitions. They also air on digi channel ZDFinfo.

The department of environmental affairs oversees environmental strand ‘Planet e,’ which includes programs on such subjects as nature conservation and biodiversity, human beings and development, energy supply, green economy, and climate change among others.

ZDF’s department of culture and science oversees doc projects regarding religion, history, nature, medicine and science. In addition to slots airing these docs, 37-minute slots are also allocated to three departmental divisions – History and Science, Church and Life (Protestant), and Church and Life (Catholic) – on a rotating basis.

The Sunday night ‘Terrax’ slot, airing at 7:30 p.m., focuses on ancient history, mythology and scientific experimentation and has expanded to include wildlife. ZDF calls the projects airing on the strand “science thrillers,” and they rate well, attracting several million viewers.

A human interest slot, airing Tuesdays at 10:15 p.m., features the strand ‘37°,’ which examines themes that reside within the intersection of culture, religion and society. For this slot, 80% of the projects are commissioned, 10% are ZDF in-house productions, and 10% are coproductions or acquisitions.

The Church and Life divisions are behind what ZDF calls “high-gloss documentaries on biblical and archaeological subjects” which tend to air around the holidays.

Of course, there’s ZDF/ARTE, the joint venture between ZDF, ARD and French culture channel ARTE. ZDF supplies approximately 1,200 hours per year to ARTE, and 35% of those programs are new productions created as coproductions with ZDF and aired by ARTE. Documentaries represent about 40% of ARTE’s total programming. Details on ARTE’s programming needs can also be found in the aforementioned brochure.

SATELLITE AND DIGITAL CHANNELS:
Producers should also take note of satellite channel 3sat, a co-venture between German broadcasters ZDF and ARD, Austrian broadcaster ORF and Switzerland’s SF which receives approximately 220 hours of doc programming from ZDF per year. About 20% of the docs airing on the channel are coproductions or acquisitions.

Digital channels include ZDFneo, which airs factual entertainment and docs in addition to music, fiction, variety and comedy content, news, documentary and information channel ZDFinfo, and cultural channel ZDFkultur.

HOW TO PITCH:
Here, the commercial arm of the broadcaster, ZDF Enterprises (ZDFE), can be a valuable ally. As a distributor and intermediary between the international market and ZDF, those in its documentary and coproduction department – director Kristina Hollstein and project manager Nikolas Huelbusch – can guide producers to the right contacts within the ZDF family for potential productions, copros or acquisitions.

ZDFE also invests in some copros with ZDF, and looks for international partners for them, and it’s also looking for projects to acquire from the international market independently from ZDF.

Check www.zdf-enterprises.de for contact emails.

BW
RAI3 – ITALY
LORENZO HENDEL
HEAD OF DOC3

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
Hendel heads up DOC3, part of RAI3, the channel of Italy’s national public broadcaster specifically devoted to news and documentaries. He says its audience is mostly drawn to “interesting, critical and original points of view about society, and about the great issues of the human condition: life and death, health and illness, sexual identity, human relationships, [et cetera].”
“The documentaries we aim to support are mainly about ‘human stories,’ with important and urgent social problems in the background,” he adds. “The stories have to be narrated in a character-driven style, with action more than interviews.” He also says “strong stories with a strong tension” work best for him.
Hendel is looking for one-offs, not series, and DOC3 pays approximately €15,000 (US$18,445) for a sale, and €25,000 (US$30,752) for a pre-sale.

HOW TO PITCH:
As the only pitching contact for DOC3, Hendel says, “The rule for me is ‘the more I get, the better it is.’” A demo that focuses on the characters and the story, rather than one that tries to mirror the style of the project, is preferred.
He also wants “some pages to understand and to figure out what the doc will be, [with] details about the style and the approach, details about the access and the relationships [between the] author [and] character.” However, in those pages, don’t spend too much time or energy focusing on the central issue that the doc addresses. “What is important for me is not just the importance of the issue, but the strength of the narration of the story and the strength of the characters,” Hendel maintains. AB/BW

CONTACT:
l.hendel@rai.it

“The documentaries we aim to support are mainly about human stories.”
“We are a commercial network; anything too niche is not for us.”
We don’t like re-enactments.
And no hosts!

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
The Dutch network’s arts documentary strand ‘Close Up’ is in need of single, 52-minute documentaries that can cover film, design, architecture, photography and contemporary art. Huijbregts cautions that the docs need to be interesting enough for a wide audience, and “not too artistic.” Recent films that AVRO has invested in include Marina Abramovic: The Artist is Present, and films on Jean Paul Goude, Norman Forster, Lang Lang, Oswald Boateng and Michael Nyman. In addition to having a good story, your doc will need to be nice to look at as well. “The art has to be shot very beautifully [and it is] important that you can enjoy watching it as though you are standing next to or in front of it,” she offers. AVRO has approximately 250,000 viewers, so Huijbregts needs films suitable for a broad audience.

WHAT SHE’S NOT LOOKING FOR:
“We don’t like re-enactments. And no hosts!”

HOW TO PITCH:
“Send a synopsis, preferably with a trailer, and be clear whether the film is ready or whether you want to coproduce,” she advises.
While Lavie says its audience is "very eclectic," main age demos are 35-44, and 55 and over.

I expect to see a clear story, engaging characters and excellent filmmaking.

“Just as our channel’s slogan is ‘People – That’s the Whole Story,’ we’re looking for excellent documentary one-offs and series with engaging human stories,” says Guy Lavie, head of YesDocu. The Israeli net is an all-doc channel, broadcasting non-fiction 18 hours a day, including a new film every weekday. “A few times a year we do special theme weeks, such as ‘Docu-Fashion,’ ‘Docu-Chef,’ ‘DocuNomics,’ ‘Docu.Com,’ and ‘Docu-Music,’” Lavie explains. Examples of local films commissioned for the network’s ‘Israeli Slot’ include the Emmy-winning Google Baby, the DOK Leipzig-winning Life in Shilo, and the Sundance-winning A Film Unfinished. Examples of its acquired or pre-bought films include The Queen of Versailles, Ballroom Dancer, Woody Allen: A Documentary, Searching for Sugar Man, Putin’s Kiss, Whores’ Glory, Paul Simon: Under African Skies, The Cove, Donor Unknown and Burma VJ.

“This audience is looking for alternative, intelligent, high profile, thought-provoking, engaging, well made television,” sums up Lavie.

“Just as our channel’s slogan is ‘People – That’s the Whole Story,’ we’re looking for excellent documentary one-offs and series with engaging human stories,” says Guy Lavie, head of YesDocu.
“Ninety percent of our schedule is acquisitions; we’re acquisition-heavy.”
Our local production focus has shifted from specials to series.

A+E NETWORKS ALL ASIA
MICHELE SCHOFIELD
SVP, PROGRAMMING AND MARKETING

THE BREAKDOWN:
Three networks reside under the AETN All Asia umbrella: History, Bio (The Biography Channel) and CI (Crime and Investigation Network). Schofield says third-party acquired programs comprise “around 20-30% depending on our channels. CI and Bio are heavier on third-party acquisitions than History.” Still more content comes from the A+E Networks stable.

Of locally produced series, Hidden Cities, in which host Anthony Morse explores some of the lesser-known destinations within Asia, has performed well for History. Marina Bay Sands 24/7, a behind the scenes look at the iconic Singapore hotel, was a big hit for Bio, says Schofield. CI, meanwhile, focused on two locally made series over the past year – season two of Partners in Crime and Asia’s Underworld.

“You can see that our local production focus has shifted from specials to series and we are seeing the rewards of taking those bigger risks in our viewership,” she says.

WHAT SHE’S LOOKING FOR:
Schofield says producers from outside of Asia should note that “our main focus when it comes to contributing to commissions or coproductions is for content to be Asian in some way. We produce content for the purpose of localizing our channels for Asia.” However, “if the project interests us but the topic is more universal, and not so Asian, we may offer to pre-buy the title as an acquisition, instead of coproduce.”

HOW TO PITCH:
For local producers and those pitching potential coproductions, pitches should include a brief outline of the story and style of program, details regarding the access secured (for example, “interviewees or any selling points to the production which are unique to you as the producer”), budget details including any financing already secured, and a rough timeline for delivery. For a finished program to be considered for acquisition, send a story synopsis and preferably a link to screen the content online.

“If we haven’t worked with you before, an introduction to your company, including a web link or reel is very beneficial,” adds Schofield.

SIZZLE TIPS:
“Show us the characters, show us the environment you’ll be shooting in, tell us the story you’re going to tell,” she advises. “We don’t want a glossy trailer that plays more like a program sizzle.”

BW
Email Channa directly via vikram_channa@discovery.com, or contact VP of programming Charmaine Kwan at charmaine_kwan@discovery.com. Also be sure to check out the Discovery producer’s portal at http://producers.discovery.com.

“‘Credible Insiders,’ as we like to call them, are key.”

ONE-PAGER PLEASE, BUT IF THERE IS TALENT ATTACHED, THEN “A SIZZLE OR A LINK IS A MUST.”

CONTACTS:

TREATMENT OR TAPE?:

One-pager please, but if there is talent attached, then “a sizzle or a link is a must.”

DISCOVERY NETWORKS ASIA-PACIFIC (DNAP)

VIKRAM CHANNA
VICE PRESIDENT, PRODUCTION & DEVELOPMENT

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
Demographics vary across DNAP’s eight networks (Discovery Channel, Animal Planet, TLC, Discovery Science, Discovery HD World, Discovery Turbo, Discovery Home & Health and the recently launched Discovery Kids) but Channa says “our core audience is adults aged 25-54.”

For Discovery Channel, Channa says “‘survival’ in its various forms continues to reinvent and rate. In addition, epic history, both in terms of never seen before archives as well as with dramatic re-enactments, has done very well for us recently.” Meanwhile, for TLC, “shows on travel and cuisine continue to be a staple.” For the new kids net, Channa says “we are on the lookout to develop original kids formats in both the live action and animation space which are both smart and fun.” The sweet spot for that network in terms of age is seven to 10.

Across the board with the factual and lifestyle nets, Channa says “talent with specialist skills or points of view” is a vital ingredient in the programming recipe. “‘Credible Insiders,’ as we like to call them, are key as they conspire to get only the most ‘authentic’ experiences from diverse spaces for our audiences.”

SERIES VOLUMES:
“On Discovery Channel the range of investment can vary,” he says. “We tend to produce both one-offs as well as short run series of three to six episodes.” As for TLC, again, costs vary, but six- to 13-part series tend to be the typical range.

“For Discovery Kids we are developing original formats and are keen on 13-part series,” he adds.

PITCHING DOS AND DON’TS:
Do be sure to visit the producer’s portal listed above, and email pitches as well as pitches by appointment are fine. “Do your homework on the specific needs of the network and get straight to the key selling point of your idea,” he says. “Don’t cold call via the reception and start pitching your idea immediately after a hurried introduction. Same at conferences and events. Let’s set a time and have a good session.”

SIZZLE TIPS:
When it comes to crafting a killer sizzle, Channa recommends the following. “Clarity of concept, strong imagery and effective use of talent or key characters.”
Francis joined Fox International Channels (FIC) in fall 2011 after seven years with Discovery, and is primarily focused on helping enable local markets in Asia to set up their own production capabilities. “I oversee 14 separate territories, of which six or seven will start doing local series this year, and the others will start doing specials or extensions of existing global franchises, like Megafactories or some of our flagship strands on Nat Geo,” he explains. “My role is to oversee opportunities for sharing coproduction within the region, but also there are a lot of markets where we don’t have EPs and we haven’t commissioned original productions, and that’s where I’m focused. Markets like Malaysia, the Philippines, Hong Kong... we want to start to connect with our audiences better via local programming.”

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
Francis says that in the past, Nat Geo would order pan-regional shows for Asia that might only rate highly in five out of 14 territories or so. Now, however, FIC wants more targeted success at a local level in each territory. As such, Francis advises producers pitching him to “start targeting a certain audience,” rather than coming to him with blanket ideas for Asia. For 2013, he will be looking for about 70 original hours of local programming across the region, “which is a big jump up for us,” he says. “Personally, when I commission, there are a lot of boxes to tick, but I put a premium on originality. I’m hoping that I’ll find some gem of an idea that is familiar but entirely unique to the culture it’s coming from.”

Francis adds that with 80% to 90% of content still coming from the U.S. and international Nat Geo channels, “if and when we do decide to do a local production out of Asia, our ratings expectations are much higher – or at least on par with the top U.S. programs that air on NGC.”

MONEY MATTERS:
“I’m working on it by local markets right now, so it’s a bit difficult to give a solid answer, but we could spend anything from US$50,000 to $100,000 to more depending on how much money we raise,” says Francis. “Also, I can offer series. Even with a big international production company, a lot of them would rather have a series even if the per hour budget is lower, because they can plan for their whole year. They can grow their businesses based on that, because I’m after volume.” AB
KBS
KENNY BAE
SENIOR PRODUCER, INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS DEPARTMENT

OVERVIEW:
KBS operates three TV channels in South Korea, including international satellite channel KBS World, and serves not only as the country’s public broadcaster, but also as its most influential media organization. It actively seeks documentary coproductions with European and North American partners, which are predominantly overseen by Bae. “I work in the international relations department and I’m in charge of international coproductions, and all the content-related cooperation with international partners,” he explains.

WHAT HE’S LOOKING FOR:
Bae is only focused on single docs, since “series are somewhat difficult and most of our documentary slots are one hour.” For KBS, he is involved in both coproductions and acquisitions, with the former accounting for about 10%-15% of his annual spend (amounting to about five to seven docs) and the rest going towards finished titles. “We are a very general interest network,” he explains. “We want titles that have a strong storyline, a creative approach, and something unique. If it’s also relevant for a Korean audience, that would be preferable.”

TIPS FOR PRODUCERS:
“The timing of delivery and the relevance for a Korean audience is very important,” says Bae. “A couple of years ago I was pitched a film about Chernobyl, and at the time I thought we weren’t really interested in it. “But after the disaster in Japan, I looked frantically for the business card and contact info, and then we acquired it.” He adds that the broadcaster also has “some general interest in wildlife and current affairs” titles.

THE BEST WAY TO PITCH HIM:
Email him directly at baepd@kbs.co.kr. “KBS is very keen to work with international partners, so send me an email with your proposal,” he says, adding that clips and trailers are definitely a plus.
“[If it’s finished, send us a DVD, and if it’s in the development stages, provide a link or a trailer] – it will be helpful in understanding the project.”

“ ”

We want a strong storyline, a creative approach and something unique.”
Okutsu highlights two prime slots for acquisitions of international productions – ‘World Documentary’ and ‘Dramatic Planet.’ For the former, programmers are looking to commission and acquire a wide spectrum of current affairs docs, ranging from social and political documentaries, to films focusing on the economy, ecology or modern history. Projects dealing with human interest stories, the arts, music or technology are also acceptable, “provided that the subject of the film has social and/or global dimensions,” she says. Yearly, this strand acquires close to 90 films from abroad, and for the slot, NHK coproduces some 15 programs with foreign broadcasters and prodcos. Recent productions airing here include Armadillo (Frithyld Film), The Day that Changed the World (a copro from Brook Lapping Productions and NHK), and NTR – Nuclear, Nothing to Report (ARTE France, Crescendo Films).

Okutsu says currently, the following topics are in demand for ‘World Documentary’ – alternative energy and the future of energy technology; social issues related to the economic crisis in Europe; ecology; and emerging societies within Asia, Latin America and Africa. “For coproduction with NHK in general, any topic is worth looking into,” she adds. “But from our past experience, we find that science, natural history, modern history, geo-politics and civilization especially work well for coproduction.”

‘Dramatic Planet’ airs “entertaining documentaries that are fit for family viewing like ancient history, culture, science, space, adventure, [or] wildlife,” says Okutsu. She adds that many of the 40 programs bought for the slot over the course of a year highlight advances in camera technology, and “allow us to see what the human eye could not see before. Be it the world of space, nature, history, we are seeing many documentaries that reveal new truths by visually entertaining us at the same time.” Recent films in this slot include Dogs that Changed the World (Thirteen/WNET New York, Tigress Productions), and Planet Dinosaur (Darlow Smithson Productions).

“Science, natural history, modern history, geo-politics and civilization work for coproduction.”

For ‘World Documentary,’ if you’re interested in coproducing with NHK, send a synopsis or treatment of the project, production schedule, names of other main partners and clips or rough cuts. For acquisitions, send a synopsis and screener. For ‘Dramatic Planet,’ you will need to send a full-length screener.

WHAT THEY WANT:

CONTACTS:

Takaaki Takai (takai.t-fw@nhk.or.jp), Tomoko Okutsu (okutsu.t-ii@nhk.or.jp) for ‘World Documentary.’ Akira Yoshizawa (yoshizawa.a-fs@nhk.or.jp), Wakako Nagano (nagano.w-iw@nhk.or.jp) for ‘Dramatic Planet.’
Our main aim is to see that strong films get made.
CINEREACH
ADELLA LADJEVARDI
GRANTS MANAGER

WHAT IT SUPPORTS:
Cinereach awards grants to feature-length non-fiction and fiction films that are “at the intersection of engaging storytelling, visual artistry, and vital subject matter,” the organization says. Grants range from US$5,000 to $50,000 per project and can be awarded to support any stage of production, including development, production and post.

WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW:
Applicants often have the mistaken impression that Cinereach is seeking to support only “social issue films,” says Ladjevardi. “I would encourage prospective applicants to look at a wide sampling of our past grant recipients.”

The first step in being considered for a Cinereach grant is to submit an online letter of inquiry during one of its open call grant cycles. Deadlines vary from cycle to cycle, so interested filmmakers should join the email list at Cinereach.org to be among the first to be notified of forthcoming open calls.

WHERE TO APPLY:
cinereach.org/grants/how-to-apply

CASH AVAILABLE:
US$5,000 to $50,000 per project.

SUNDANCE INSTITUTE DOCUMENTARY FILM PROGRAM AND FUND

FUNDING CYCLES:
Deadlines are twice a year, in February and July.

CASH AVAILABLE:
More than US$1.2 million for up to 40 feature docs per year.

CONTACTS:
Email dfp@sundance.org; info online at www.sundance.org/programs/documentary-fund

WHAT IT BACKS:
The Sundance Institute Documentary Film Program and Fund (DFP) supports independent, feature-length docs with contemporary-issue themes. Ideal projects are “cinematic or feature strong storytelling, global relevance, and originality,” according to the DFP. Supported projects include Bully, The Invisible War, The Island President, Gasland, Ai Weiwei: Never Sorry, The Queen of Versailles, Planet of Snail and The Interrupters.

GRANTS AVAILABLE:
The DFP reviews 1,700 to 2,000 proposals annually, supporting between 45-55 projects each year. Grant awards provide partial funding and are not recoupable.

Funding is available in four categories: development (submit up to 20 minutes of edited tape, US$10,000-$20,000 available); production/post-production (submit up to full rough cut, $20,000-$50,000); audience engagement (prior grantees only, up to $20,000); and discretionary (up to $15,000).

WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW:
Deadlines are February and July annually, and funding decisions take five to six months from the deadline date. In addition to funding, grantees are eligible for year-round creative support. Applications require a written proposal and budget top sheet, as well as edited sample footage. Ideally projects should have secured access, a developed story idea, and a sample tape prior to submission.

WHERE TO FIND THEM:
Representatives generally attend IDFA Forum, Hot Docs Forum, IFP Week, Sheffield Doc/Fest MeetMarket, and the Good Pitch events. Additional representation is often at DocEdge India, Latin Side of The Doc, Durban Film Market, Greenhouse Forum and Jihlava Doc Forum.
The TFI aims to support creatively authored original stories.

THE TRIBECA FILM INSTITUTE

RYAN HARRINGTON
DIRECTOR OF DOCUMENTARY PROGRAMMING

WHAT IT SUPPORTS:
The Tribeca Film Institute (TFI) is a year-round non-profit arts organization founded by Robert De Niro, Jane Rosenthal and Craig Hatkoff in the wake of the September 11 terror attacks to help revitalize New York City and Lower Manhattan.

The TFI provides funding and guidance to support filmmakers through a number of distinctive programming areas: Tribeca All Access promotes the careers of filmmakers from diverse backgrounds through professional guidance and grants; the TFI Documentary Fund, which houses the new TFI/ESPN Prize, funds and furthers the development of character-driven documentaries; and the Gucci Tribeca Documentary Fund provides grants to feature-length documentaries which highlight and humanize issues of social importance.

In addition, the TFI Latin America Media Arts Fund provides grants to innovative documentary filmmakers working in the Caribbean, Mexico, Central and South America; the Heineken VOCES Grant supports Latino American filmmakers; and the TFI New Media Fund provides grants and launches exceptional cross-platform media projects that address social issues and stories of inequality.

THE AMOUNT IT GIVES:
The organization funds up to 40 feature documentaries and four to eight cross-platform/interactive projects annually, with grants ranging from US$10,000 to $100,000, equaling more than $1.2 million annually.

TAKE NOTE:
“The TFI is a filmmaker-focused organization that aims to support creatively authored original stories, driven by thoughtful and in-depth storytelling and bolstered by a compelling visual approach, with engaging characters and unique access,” says Harrington.

“Funded documentary films must have a dedication to craft, contemporary resonance, be able to exist on multiple distribution platforms and resonate with an audience.”

For new media, the organization is looking for projects “that activate audiences around issues of contemporary social justice and equality around the world, and demonstrate the power of cross-platform storytelling and dynamic audience engagement,” he adds.

DEADLINES:
The TFI has two funding cycles per year: September 5 to November 5, and December 5 to February 5. Further information is available at tribecafilm institute.org.

AB
WE’VE OPENED THE VAULT.

Perfect footage for your pitch!
100% Searchable & Downloadable

Discovery ACCESS
Let our footage be part of your story
www.DiscoveryAccess.com